Midnight Bombs Rip London Shops

Times News Service

LONDON — A dozen bombs exploded along Oxford Street early today, closing the busy shopping area while police searched office buildings and stores for more hidden explosives.

Police said no one was injured in the 12 explosions that shattered shop windows and caused three fires just after midnight when the area was virtually deserted. They were the first bombings in London in seven months.

A man claiming to represent the Irish Republican Army said later the IRA was responsible for the bomb blasts.

In a telephone call to The Sunday Mirror newspaper office in Manchester, the man said members of the IRA's Provisional wing planted the bombs.

The message said: "The Provisional IRA claim full responsibility for the bombings in London. The campaign will continue throughout England until the British government announces a declaration of withdrawal of its army out of Northern Ireland."

Meanwhile, police warned Londoners today to be on the alert for more bombs.

The blasts occurred 1½ miles west of the Central Criminal Court, known as the Old Bailey, where four Irishmen are on trial. The alleged Irish Republican Army members are accused of bombings and other terrorism that claimed seven lives in London in 1975.

A man and a woman who police said had been "acting suspiciously" in the area of the blasts were taken into custody for questioning. But police said later the two had nothing to do with the bombings.

Police sources said the bombings could be associated with the fifth anniversary of the "Bloody Sunday" shootings of demonstrators by British troops in Londonderry, Northern Ireland, or with the current Balcombe Street siege trial of the four alleged Irish Republican Army bombers.

Police sealed off roads in the West End area as far as Regent Street. The two underground train stations serving the central London shopping district closed for the day.

B.C. Liquor Prices Going Up April 1

The price of liquor in British Columbia is going up April 1 by 20 cents a bottle or more, in the case of some imported wines much more.

That happens to be April Fool's Day but the humor is likely to be lost on people who drop by their local liquor store on a regular basis.

Nick Clark, purchasing agent with the Liquor Administration Branch in Vancouver, said Friday domestic liquor prices will rise between 25 and 30 cents a bottle. Scotch will cost about 20 cents a bottle more and other imported spirits might increase, depending on currency fluctuations.

A drought in the Beaujolais area of Franch reduced the grape crop last year and Beaujolais Superieur will jump from $4.55 to $6.10 a bottle. Pouilly Fuisse will go from $6.80 to $9.45.

Vic Woodland, general manager of the liquor control and licensing branch, said in Victoria today the government agency is just passing along increasing costs.

Regulations require the branch to maintain its mark-up, he said.

He blamed the increases on continuing inflationary pressure on manufacturers, higher costs for everything from labor to glass for the bottles and labels.

BANKER SHOT, ROBBER ESCAPES

CHILLIWACK (CP) — The manager of a Chilliwack Toronto-Dominion Bank branch was in fair condition in hospital Friday night after being shot in the groin and midsection during a robbery.

Police said John Steven Cavengen, 62, who was two weeks from retirement, was shot during a scuffle with a young man armed with a .22-calibre rifle.

Police said the man entered the bank, located at a shopping mall, shortly before closing time and demanded money.

Police said the man escaped with an undetermined amount of cash. Roadblocks around the city, about 60 miles east of Vancouver, failed to turn up any trace of the gunman.

Trudeau Comes Out Swinging

Times News Services

QUEBEC — Prime Minister Trudeau has wound up one of the punchiest pro-federalist shows the provincial capital has seen in years.

Trudeau came out swinging Thursday and Friday, trying to discredit separatist philosophy and appealing to all Canadians to become more tolerant of one another.

His parting note from a Liberal party function Friday night was to remind his followers that they faced two battles — separatism and victories in five forthcoming federal byelections in Quebec.

Earlier Friday, Trudeau's speech to several hundred businessmen was described by some observers as one of the best of his career.

The prime minister warned Quebecers that they must take a firm decision on their future because uncertainty is hurting the province's economy.

They must decide between independence or association; danger or opportunity, he said.

His appeal to English-Canadians was to be more tolerant of French-Canadians.

"Many English say to Quebec don't leave us, we need you.

"But, you English-Canadians, what are you doing about it? Are you going to beef when you see French on a soup can or a box of corn flakes?"

He added that business in Quebec has already suffered for years from the province's political uncertainty.

"To choose demands maturity and develops maturity," said the Prime Minister, comparing Quebec to an adolescent about to choose his life's aspiration.

"But the choice must be made clearly and must be made soon."

The sentiments he expressed during a busy two days could perhaps be symbolized by an incident Friday evening when Trudeau walked through a crowded shopping centre to chat and shake hands.

A youth, who described himself as a Quebec nationalist and who had been following the prime minister for several minutes waving Quebec's blue-and-white flag, suddenly found himself in a tug-of-war with Trudeau for possession of the banner.

"It's my flag," the bearded youth said.

"It's my flag too," Trudeau replied, yanking it out of the surprised youth's hands and waving it to a cheering crowd of several hundred.

Premier Rene Levesque, meanwhile, told Quebec's largest employer association Friday that the referendum on Quebec's independence would be held in about two years, the president of the Conseil du Patronat du Quebec said.

Pierre des Marais II said Levesque told the Conseil at a meeting that the referendum would be held "as soon as possible, probably two years or little longer."

Until now, Levesque has been hesitant about specifying when the referendum would be held, saying only it would be within the government's five-year mandate.

The Conseil is anxious to have the question of independence settled one way or the other as soon as possible because the waiting period has caused uncertainty which is bad for investment, des Marais said.

Two Inmates Caught In Second-Try Escape

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Two men who escaped from Wilkinson Road jail for 15 days last month failed Friday in another scramble for freedom.

Saanich police said Dennis Matthew Wilson, 23, and Thomas Russell Totten, 26, were being led under sheriff's guard into the fence-enclosed intake area at about 12:45 p.m. when they broke free.

Wilson climbed over the 10-foot fence, cutting his hands on three strands of barbed wire on top.

Totten, right behind him, never made it. A sheriff grabbed him by the leg and wrestled him to the ground.

The escape triggered an alarm and several jail employees raced to their cars and chased the fugitive.

A worker in the hospital unit spotted Wilson at the corner of Wilkinson Road and Interurban less than a quarter mile away from the jail. At the same time police arrived and took him into custody.

Wilson was returned to the jail where he and Totten were frisked and put into isolation cells.

Prison officials said Wilson had two pieces of paper on which he had written names and addresses of several persons on the Island. He was carrying a small package of white pepper which they think he intended to use to throw tracking dogs off his scent.

The pair last escaped on Dec. 7.

Spain Hunts Terrorists

Times News Services

MADRID — The Spanish government has cleared the way for a police crackdown on extremists after an outburst of political violence that has taken 10 lives in the last week.

Under mounting pressure to halt the bloodshed, the cabinet of Premier Adolfo Suarez Friday night stopped short of declaring a state of emergency but gave police sweeping powers of search and arrest.

The government move, which followed the killings here Friday of two policemen and one paramilitary civil guard and the wounding of three other policemen, was expected to herald arrests throughout Spain of extremists and their sympathizers.

Under the new powers, which involve the suspension of two articles in the Spanish bill of rights for a month, police will be able to search homes without warrants and hold suspects indefinitely.

The cabinet said that a state of emergency was not necessary because the murders were the work of minority groups only.

Meanwhile, a left-wing urban guerrilla group today said it is responsible for the submachine gun slayings of the three Madrid policemen.

Grounded Barge Leaking Oil

BUZZARDS BAY, Mass. (UPI) — A 350-foot barge, leaking some of its 3.5 million gallons of highly toxic home heating fuel, today appeared to be slowly sinking in ice clogged waters about 100 yards off the shores of this summer resort area.

Hundreds of yards of beach shoreline have been defiled by an undetermined amount of the no. 2 oil, which is seeping up through cracks in the ice and giving the sandy beaches a yellowish tinge.

According to witnesses the oil can be smelled at least one mile away from the shores of Wings Neck. The barge has large holes in four of its 10 compartments.

Authorities said major ecological damage could occur because most of the oil is trapped beneath one foot thick ice and is unable to dissipate. "They can see oil beneath the ice," coast guard spokesman Charles Crosby said.

It is the second incident in about one year involving the same barge in almost the same exact area.

"At dawn today seamen were attempting to manoeuvre two tug boats and an empty barge dispatched by the grounded vessel's owners, the Bouchard Transport Co., of Hicksville, N.Y., next to the striken one in an attempt to offload the cargo. "But the ice is preventing quick action," a coast guard spokesman said.

BCR Inquiry Moves Closer To Old Socreds

Deputy attorney-general David Vickers said Friday he will require statements from former senior officials of the British Columbia Railway if they are necessary to his investigation of contracts let by the railway on its Dease Lake extension.

Vickers did not name any railway officials, but former premier W. A. C. Bennett was president of the Crown-owned railway when the controversial contracts were let in the early 1970s.

Other directors of the railway at the time were Ray Williston, then minister of lands and forests and now head of the B.C. Cellulose Corporation, Einar Gunderson, a former aide and confidant of the senior Bennett and Joe Broadbent, then vice-president of the railway and its chief operating executive.

Vickers was appointed about two weeks ago to head an in-house investigation into circumstances surrounding a court case involving M.E.L. Paving, a Red Deer, Alta., construction company which sued B.C. Rail for civil fraud. The case was settled out of court for $2.5 million.

M.E.L. claimed in its suit that B.C. Rail was grossly inaccurate in estimates of grading work to be done on the extension.

The New Democratic Party opposition said the government covered up a disastrous past by settling the case out of court and refusing to hold a judicial inquiry into the matter.

Vickers said a review of 5,000 pages of court transcript dealing with the M.E.L. Paving suit has not been completed and it has not been determined whether statements will be required from former railway principals to assist his investigation.

A decision on further interviews is expected in about two weeks, he said, none of the previous directors testified at the trial before the suit was settled out of court.

DESPITE THE LOSS of his right eye, Ron Trafford, injured in a hockey game earlier this week, will return to the Cougar lineup. According to coach Pat Ginnell, the player could be back on the ice "within 10 days to two weeks." See story, Page 16.

Snow, Winds Strangling U.S. East, Ontario

Times News Services

Blizzard conditions held the eastern and midwestern United States in a stranglehold today, plummeting temperatures to about 20 below Celsius, disrupting travel by road, air and foot, and forcing several states to call out National Guard units to dig out cities and rescue stranded motorists.

Blowing and drifting snow also created havoc in southwestern Ontario on Friday, forcing the closing of many schools, highways and businesses.

Hardest hit were the Windsor, Chatham, St. Thomas, Stratford and London areas were snow blown by gusting winds closed all roads and highways.

In Chatham, all bus, taxi and private vehicle traffic was halted and public works department snowplows and sanders were ordered to clear emergency routes only. All schools and most businesses closed early.

High winds blew down a wall of a warehouse owned by Eaton-Yale Ltd., a Chatham company which manufactures auto parts. There were no injuries.

The weather office said up to 10 cm of snow had fallen in many areas of southwestern Ontario by noon Friday and predicted a continuation of very cold temperatures and severe drifting today.

Tony Fredo, a spokesman for Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd., said the company cancelled afternoon shifts at its plants in Oakville, St. Thomas and Niagara Falls because of the storm.

Provincial police reported hazardous driving conditions on all highways in the western region of the province. One police spokesman said he would order all highways closed if he had the manpower to enforce it.

A 90-mile stretch of Highway 401 between Chatham and Windsor was closed and police urged drivers elsewhere to stay off roads unless absolutely necessary.

At least seven died in stranded vehicles in or near Buffalo, N.Y., where winds gusted to 121 k.p.h. and temperatures fell to 20 below (C) at 3 a.m.

In Ohio, the bodies of five men were found in their car which had slid off an icy road near Fostoria. Searchers looking for stragglers in subzero temperatures and blowing snow discovered the victims.

"They apparently froze to death," said deputy sheriff C. R. Roberts.

The frozen bodies of two women who walked away from stalled cars were found Friday in Illinois, one in a snow bank near Sullivan in central Illinois and the other on a road outside of Joliet.

Buffalo firefighters struggled through snow-smothered strets littered with hundreds of abandoned cars and buses to battle a five-alarm fire that spread through six houses of the city's West Side Friday night.

Buffalo Fire Commissioner Karl Kubiak urged snowmobile owners to make their equipment available if needed, and police were using snowmobiles.

Ben Colker, a National Weather Service meteorologist who has been in Buffalo 38 years, said the storm

David's Slave Makes Life Possible

David Young has a slave called TOSC. Without his slave David couldn't use the phone, turn on the lights at home or watch TV on his own.

Young was severely disabled by polio 21 years ago, brought from his home at Alert Bay at the north end of Vancouver Island to live for years in a wing of Pearson Hospital in Vancouver.

In hospital he learned to paint in oils, holding palette knives in his mouth and designing an easel he could handle. He has passed the supreme test of any artist, selling his work.

More recently he has emerged from hospital to join the rest of the world, a family man living in an apartment in Vancouver.

The Kinsmen Mother's March, a door-to-door campaign, begins Sunday and runs to next Saturday through the province.

The annual campaign is the main support for the Kinsmen Rehabilitation Foundation.

With it in his home he can operate many of the little things the rest of us take for granted. It will turn the radio or television on and off for him, operate light switches or an intercom.

"I especially appreciated the fact that I can operate the phone, both incoming and outgoing calls," said David. "The TOSC really is a willing and valuable slave that aids greatly in daily living."

The TOSC equipment used by Young is one of several types of electronic units pioneered in this country by the Kinsmen Rehabilitation Foundation. This year the foundation marks 25 years of providing a wide range of services to people in B.C. of all ages stricken with physical disabilities of all kinds.

Since the first unit went to Mrs. Jo Kelly of Richmond four years ago, the foundation now has 44 such units placed with severely disabled people throughout the province.

Their ages range from 7 to 62 and 33 are living at home.

Mrs. Roy Enger, foundation president, says "one of the things the KRF is proud to be doing is to be providing the kind of help that not only gives the physically disabled person a valued measure of independence, often enabling them to live at home, but which at the same time makes life easier, both psychologically and physically, for their families."

Brothers Keeping Watch

The heads of the Saanich and Victoria police detective squads are keeping it all in the family.

In Victoria, his younger brother, Insp. Angus Stewart, 50, will take over command of the city detective branch Tuesday on the retirement of Insp. Norman Bath, 60.

For Angus Stewart it's a return to familiar ground. A member of the department since 1947, he was detective staff-sergeant, second in command of the branch, for several years before his promotion in September, 1975, to inspector.

Bath is retiring after 36 years and seven months service.

In a prepared statement, Bath said he still believed in "an eye for an eye," lamented there were too many forgotten victims in society today and concluded it was evident it was time for him to pass on the job to younger men molded to a new philosophy.

Prosecutor Merit Pay?

The provincial cabinet is considering a proposal which would give Crown lawyers pay increases on the basis of merit rather than length of service.

Senior Crown counsel on the Lower Mainland and the Interior said this week the proposal has been made to cabinet by Finance Minister Evan Wolfe.

Neil McDiarmid, director of the Crown counsel program, refused Friday to confirm or deny the report.

He said the introduction of a merit-pay scheme has been under discussion for some time by the Government Employees Labor Relations Bureau as one way of attracting more lawyers into the civil service.

McDiarmid conceded there has been a continuing pay problem. He has received several submissionbs from Crown lawyers complaining about the inadequacy of the salary schedule, particularly at the lower levels.

He noted Crown lawyers are paid $15,000 to $33,000 a year with regional Crown counsel rising to $38,900.

But the pay increases, he said, are geared to the civil service salary schedule and do not always take into account the individual's competence.

A senior Crown counsel in the interior, who asked that his name not be used, told a Vancouver paper the system might collapse unless the cabinet acts quickly.

He complained ad hoc lawyers — private lawyers hired to prosecute cases — are earning twice as much as Crown prosecutors.

He said there is no way of firing incompetent prosecutors. About 20 per cent of Crown lawyers are contributing, through lack of experience or competence, to the court backlog, he claimed.

He said there are insufficient incentives to keep top-flight lawyers in service. The day will come when there won't be enough senior counsel to train juniors.

But McDairmid disagreed, saying recruitment is going better than ever.

The budget allows for 141 prosecutors.

McDairmid said there are 29 vacancies, none to his knowledge on the Island. Most are in the smaller communities in north and central B.C.

He said several inducements to attract lawyers have been instituted, including the right to exclusion from the union in salary negotiations and the offer of educational leave of absence every seven years with up to full pay.

McDairmid said he is considering a proposal to hire lawyers as prosecutors on a contract basis.

The importance of beefing up the Crown counsel service is in the soaring cost of ad hoc counsel fees, he said.

This year the fees will cost $3.2 million. The government hopes, through recruitment to reduce that to $3 million next fiscal year.

No-Bar Pipe Treaty

By FRANK RUTTER
Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Canada and the United States Friday signed a treaty guaranteeing non-interference and non-discrimination for pipelines carrying oil and natural gas across each other's territory.

The treaty, which will go into effect after it is ratified by the two governments, a process requiring approval by the U.S. Senate, would have its greatest impact on a proposal for a multi-billion dollar system of pipelines carrying gas from Alaska across Canada.

A recommendation on the route for such a pipeline, either through Canada or through Alaska, will be made here Tuesday by Federal Power Commission Judge Nahum Litt.

The crucial negotiating issue of the treaty was whether provincial government could be prevented from imposing special taxes on such a pipeline system.

This was resolved by deletion of six words from the original draft, a process which took a full year, to remove any ambiguity about provincial claims that sections of an international pipeline fell within their jurisdiction.

THE OUTCASTS

by Ben Wicks

Storm Strangles U.S. East

Meanwhile, in a debate that talked of a "state of siege," an "economic catastrophe," and "sacrifice," the U.S. Congress was asked Friday to speed passage of a bill giving the U.S. government unusual powers to control natural gas supplies.

Some congressional voices, however, were raised for caution, asking that even in the search for emergency gas supplies there be some restraint on the prices.

The senate heard debate and quit for the weekend, scheduling an early Monday session to mark up the natural gas bill President Carter sent Congress this week.

The energy subcommittee of the house commerce committee heard a full day of witnesses and planned to send the bill and the testimony to the full committee early Monday for action.

The house will hear a request from the leadership Tuesday to suspend house rules to bring the bill up quickly on the floor.

The crisis came home to the District of Columbia and its suburbs Friday when the Washington Gas Light Co. ordered commercial and industrial customers to cut gas to "minimal levels" at least until Tuesday. The utility's supplier, the Columbia Gas Transmission Co. of Charleston, W. Va., asked distributors in seven states to reduce demand because of a winter storm.

The cut was expected to force some schools, office buildings and stores in the District to close during the weekend or on Monday.

The administration's bill would allow the president to ration natural gas from interstate pipelines for emergency uses, and permit the interstate pipelines to buy gas not subject to price controls from intrastate pipelines — if the intrastate pipelines can spare any.

AIB Man Resigns

The resignation, confirmed by AIB Chairman Jean Luc Pepin on Friday, leaves two gaping holes in the regional representation on the AIB.

Biddell was the Ontario regional representative and spent much of his time in Toronto handling inquiries from businessmen and labor groups in southern Ontario.

Claude Castonguay, who was selected to represent the Quebec region on the AIB and who quit late last year, still hasn't been replaced.

Pepin, who quipped that he has to stay on now that everyone else seems to be quitting, said replacements for the two men would be announced by the government within a matter of days.

While Biddell couldn't be reached for comment, an AIB official said that Biddell had given "private and personal reasons" for leaving the AIB at this time.

Biddell, the official said, had told the AIB as early as last summer that he wasn't expecting to stay on for the duration of the AIB's mandate.

Hot Air Proposal

MOSCOW (AP) — Tass reported Friday that the state planning committee has approved plans for construction of mile-long balloon sky trains to carry petroleum products.

The balloon tankers would be powered by dirigibles in front and back and would have a crusing speed of about 60 miles an hour, the official news agency said.

It did not say when the new system might go into service.

U.S. Economy Posting Strong Gains

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — A 1.6-per-cent increase in the government's index of leading economic indicators — the biggest advance in 17 months — proves the U.S. economy "is poised for strong gains" in the months ahead, a senior government economist said Friday.

The December increase is the third monthly rise in a row and is the largest since a 2.3-per-cent gain in July, 1975, when the economy was starting to pull out of the deep recession. Government economists say it takes at least three months to establish a trend in any one direction.

The economy, however, is sure to show a worse performance in January and February because of the severe cold weather that has struck the eastern two-thirds of the U.S.

LABOR SLAMS CURBS

OTTAWA (CP) — Three days before renewed talks with the federal cabinet, the Canadian Labor Congress took another shot Friday at the federal anti-inflation program of selective wage and price controls.

In a statement issued by the 2.3-million-member congress, CLC president Joe Morris said the labor movement will press provincial governments to withdraw their support for the controls program.

"Trade unionists across the country will work to convince the provinces they should refuse renewal of controls agreements with the federal government when they expire March 31," Morris said.

Shortly before the CLC statement was released, Finance Minister Donald Macdonald said in the Commons the federal government hopes to resume consultations with the labor movement on "broader public issues in Canada."

Macdonald said "it would be very desirable" to include labor in some sort of arrangement for consultation on the economy between the federal government and a number of interest groups.

"Obviously, whether or not this will be done either in the near future or with the labor movement will depend very much on the outcome of discussions on Monday."

Macdonald said Ottawa also would like to include business representatives and the provincial governments in any form of economic consultation and the question will be raised at the federal-provincial finance conference Tuesday and Wednesday.

Rewrite Budget —Barrett

The Social Credit government should withdraw its budget and rewrite it, Opposition leader Dave Barret said in the legislature Friday.

He called the Social Credit government members liars and labelled the budget dishonest.

Asked to withdraw his "liars" label, he changed it to "prevaricators." Asked to withdraw that, he said the Socreds "aren't telling the truth."

Barrett charged the Socreds have underestimated revenue in their $3.8 billion budget presented Monday by at least $125 million in order to produce a surplus.

"It's a dishonest budget, it's cynical," he said.

"If this is deliberate plot to build up a surplus and then say how good they are, then that's pretty callous."

The only people who have influence with the Socreds, Barrett said, are the mining, coal, oil and forest companies and the millionaires.

"We're back to old master-servant relationship typified by this budget," he said.

"What they're saying to the people is 'Don't ask for more because those of us at the trough want a second time around': the oil companies, gobble, gobble; the forest mining companies, gobble, gobble, gobble; tht forest companies, gobble, gobble, gobble," Barrett shouted.

Barrett said he loses his usual sense of humor when he realizes the government with its increased revenue could do something about unemployment and job security "but all we find are empty promises and punishment."

"For two years now you've said you're against socialism," he yelled across the floor. "Well we know that, and we're for it, but what are you for."

NYERERE

Soviet Aid Hinted If Rhodesian Talks Fail

DAR ES SALAAM (UPI)— Tanzania appealed to Britain Friday to keep the Rhodesia peace talks going at any cost and hinted the alternative would be intervention in the guerrilla war by the Soviet Union and Cuba.

The views of President Julius Nyerere, widely considered a key black African leader involved in the Rhodesian talks, were set forth in two identical editorials published Friday in government-owned newspapers.

A ranking government official confirmed the editorials "represented Tanzania's official position." They were published as British envoy Ivor Richard resumed a southern African tour in an effort to revive the Geneva peace negotiations.

Abandoning the talks would leave Britain "discredited for all time as an effective force in the removal of minority rule in Zimgabwe (Rhodesia)" the editorials said.

Failure at Geneva "will mean that the war against the minority regime will be pursued to the end," they said. "There will be no question of the nationalists attending another conference called by Britain."

The war will then "be pursued by whatever means are necessary and with whatever allies are possible."

This was an apparent threat to enlist Cuban troops and Soviet weaponry on the side of the black nationalists, something western nations have long feared.

The editorials said in a long guerrilla war the "suffering will be terrible. The political consequences for the whole of southern Africa and perhaps the world, are incalculable."

In Lusalia, Zambia, leaders of Rhodesia's militant nationalist movement, the Patriotic Front, today urged an escalation of the guerrilla war, saying further talks on the nation's future were futile.

One of the two leaders, Robert Mugabe, said the constitutional talks on a peaceful transition to black majority rule were a waste of time. "We have got to escalate the guerrilla war immediately, the tempo must be stepped up," he said.

His co-leader, Joshua Nkomo, said the only way to bring black rule to Rhodesia was by intensifying the guerrilla fighting.

Was Kissinger Double-Crossed?

CAPE TOWN (CP) — Prime Minister John Vorster suggested Friday that someone was fooling someone during former U.S. state secretary Henry Kissinger's final diplomatic shuttle in an effort to arrange a peaceful transition to black majority rule in Rhodesia.

Vorster implied in a speech to parliament that either Kissinger hoodwinked Ian Smith, head of the white Rhodesian government, or Kissinger was double-crossed by the black countries bordering Rhodesia.

In his speech Friday, Vorster described as "a very remarkable statement" a claim by Kissinger on Sept. 28 — after the shuttle — that he had discussed all five points of the so-called Kissinger plan on Rhodesia with black African leaders prior to meeting Smith.

Vorster said Kissinger made the remark at a news conference after his return to the United States.

At the time Kissinger presented the five-point plan to Smith in Pretoria three of the five points remained to be cleared up, Vorster said.

"These were the question of a white chairman of the council of ministers in the proposed transition government, the question of white ministers of defence and law and order and the question of a two-thirds majority in the ministerial council of the transition government," Vorster said.

Lawyers Promise Aid to All

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Legal Aid Society and the legal profession will ensure that all offenders, regardless of their offence, or their place of residence, receive a competent defence in B.C., lawyer Alan McEachern, society chairman, said Thursday.

McEachern and other legal profession spokesmen were commenting on the provincial government's announced intention to deny legal aid to persons charged with certain crimes.

Attorney'-General Garde Gardom said Thursday the government will begin official negotiations with the federal government to deny free legal aid to those charged with drug trafficking, certain types of impaired driving offences and those with criminal records.

"I know there are problems of law in this, the theory of presumed innocence for example," said Gardom. "But I think the time has come to tell people such as drug traffickers that they will have to pay their own way to defend themselves."

Under the current agreement with the federal government the province must provide legal aid to any person who can't afford a lawyer and yet is charged with an indictable offence.

All drug trafficking charges are indictable offences. Impaired driving may be indictable or summary depending on how the Crown elects to proceed.

The province already has the power to unilaterally decide to deny aid to repeated offenders as was the case before 1970 when persons with three convictions in five years were not eligible.

Vancouver lawyer Bill Deverell, criminal justice section chairman of the B.C. branch of the Canadian Bar Association, said people charged with trafficking are not necessarily traffickers. He said those charged with trafficking have as much right to apply for legal aid as anyone.

Deverell said many people charged with trafficking are heroin users with very little money who sell drugs to support their habit.

"People charged with heroin trafficking with hordes of money will get highly paid counsel," he said.

"Legal aid is not automatically grafted to everybody," he said, adding that the decision on who should get aid should be left to the legal aid society.

Since last April persons charged with summary conviction offences have not been granted legal aid except in cases where there is a strong possibility conviction would lead to a jail sentence.

Deverell said denying aid to repeat offenders also is inequitable.

"People who are repeaters are often sent to jail just because they have a previous record," he said.

William O'Malley Forbes, Canadian Bar Association civil liberties section chairman, said repeaters could be the worst served by the move.

"Most people in serious jeopardy before the courts are repeat offenders," said Forbes, who noted that the right to legal representation is guaranteed in the Canadian Bill of Rights.

He said people charged in drug conspiracy cases present a special problem to legal aid, draining a large part of the society's budget during lengthy trials.

VICTIM, KIDNAPPER KILLED

VAUXHALL, Alta. (CP) — A kidnapper died in hospital early today after his woman hostage was killed late Friday night when the car in which she was being held rolled on a gravel road about 50 miles east of Calgary.

RCMP said June Waddle, 39, of the Vauxhall area, had been taken hostage on a farm near this southern Alberta community and the driver of the vehicle, Robert Joseph Legacy, 25, Mrs. Waddle's son-in-law, died later in Calgary General Hospital.

The incident started when RCMP Constable G. A. Assels of Vauxhall arrived at Glen Waddle farm, nine miles northwest of here, to investigate a report of a domestic dispute.

A man armed with a .22-calibre semi-automatic rifle bound the constable with belts, ropes, cables and tape. Mr. Waddle also had been bound and tied to a chair.

Curtis Promises Cities More Help for Housing

Two moves designed to help municipalities meet their housing problems were announced Friday in the legislature by Housing Minister Hugh Curtis.

Effective Feb. 1 the provincial payment under the Municipal Incentive Grant Program will be increased to $1,000 a unit from $500, he said.

He also announced that several municipalities throughout the province will no longer be required to share in the operating subsidy of provincial rental housing.

Curtis at the same time criticized the former NDP government for its "sloppy" handling of the housing ministry.

The minister said the grant program has been successful in its goal of developing land for homes.

He said that since the program came into operation in November, 1975, the government has received about 5,500 claim applications. Curtis added that 6,000 units will qualify during the 1977-78 fiscal year.

The minister said the communities to be relieved of the 12½-per-cent operating subsidy are Cranbrook, Dawson Creek, the Greater Vancouver Regional District, Langley District, Port Alberni, Prince George, Prince Rupert, Saanich and Victoria.

He said the 1976 municipal share of operating subsidy for the communities was between $850,000 and $870,000.

Curtis predicted that the projected saving for 1977 by the communities is $906,000.

The minister, speaking during the budget speech debate, revealed that the Crown owns 550,000 acres within municipal boundaries suitable for housing.

He said that, in addition, there are large amounts of land owned by the Crown outside of municipal boundaries that could be available for housing development. He said the figures do not include agricultural land or land affected by the agricultural land freeze.

In criticizing the former government's handling of the housing portfolio, Curtis said there were loose controls, no proper projections, lack of management restraint and lack of over-all understanding of housing problems.

The minister said the NDP kept no central records of land exchanges until the latter stages of its administration.

Radical Overhaul

It isn't difficult to understand why the provincial government abruptly last summer cut short the work of the commission of inquiry on property assessment and taxation, and was extremely wary of releasing to the public its findings, the so-called McMath report, until just two days before the statutory deadline this week.

If adopted, the report would transform entirely the present patched-up, creaky system. Frankly, the provincial government must view some of the recommendations as radical, even revolutionary.

The commission may recommend, but the government in the end must legislate. Whatever it does — ignore the McMath report's main recommendations, maintain the status quo, institute other changes — the government is sure to rouse cries of outrage. It cannot reform the existing assessment and taxation system without treading hard on the toes of one group or another.

As the previous administration learned to its dismay in the furore over Bill 42 (the Land Commission Act), when government legislates on matters affecting property ownership and taxes it does so in great peril.

It's to be hoped that the public and politicians have learned a lesson from that controversy, and that the McMath report and the basic questions it raises will be debated a little more sanely.

For the McMath commission has designed a new property tax and assessment mechanism informed by common sense and fairness. It would dismantle the inequality that has grown up or was built into the system in the last decade.

Its main recommendation is for assessment of all types of land and improvement at full market value. (At present, the report notes, residential property in B.C. is assessed on average at only 18 per cent of market value, and industrial land at 38.5 per cent.)

It would continue the homeowner grant, with some revisions to help low income property owners more, and would levy a special business tax on top of the property tax.

Another group of recommendations would see property taxes paid by many corporations and institutions that now are exempt. For example, the McMath commission said crown corporations, boards, commissions and agencies should pay taxes at the rate levied on businesses.

For example, the commission said the property of B.C. Ferries — now exempt — should be taxed. This would have tremendous ramifications for municipalities such as North Saanich, Nanaimo, Delta and West Vancouver where the main ferry terminals are located.

B. C. Rail would have to pay property taxes in municipalities such as Squamish, where it has extensive holdings including a rail car manufacturing plant which are all exempt. Squamish estimated that the BCR would have paid $114,000 in 1975 — or fully 11.3 per cent of the municipality's property tax revenues.

Municipalities should have to pay taxes on their city halls, universities and schools on their property (although the commission would have the provincial department of education pay the university taxes directly to the municipality) hospitals on their land, and so on.

Three commissioners said that churches and charitable organizations should be fully taxed on land and buildings they own, although they would be able to apply to their municipal councils for a grant equal to the tax bill. (One novel minority recommendation is for a tax on churches and religious groups equal to one per cent of their weekly collection.)

Of course, the theory behind removing the exemptions from these public and quasi-public bodies is not punitive. It is to show clearly how much these exemptions cost. At least every five years, the commission would have municipalities publish information respecting exemption of taxes for such organizations. Now, a great deal of property in every municipality is exempt but no one knows how much this is costing the rest of the municipality's taxpayers.

In large ways and small, the commission sought to simplify and rationalize the tax and assessment system, to bring some light to the neglected area of exemptions, to force senior governments to pay taxes at the same rate as ordinary citizens. One side effect would be to make the whole mess understandable by the average taxpayer, which is not happening now.

We hope that the provincial government's initial handling of the McMath report with 10-foot poles was based on ignorance of its recommendations, for once the government is familiar with its contents, their common sense and plain justice should overcome any suspicion. It is an excellent document, more remarkable for having been prepared in great haste.

EDITOR'S NOTEBOOK

The $100 Understanding of Social Credit Subleties

Minutes before MLA Ray Loewen (SC—Burnaby Edmonds) told an indifferent legislature about the joys of a 17-course dinner in Peking Wednesday night, Premier Bill Bennett bounded up the stairs to his seat in the chamber as though he might be missing some important debate.

The premier had just finished a four-course dinner at the Empress Hotel, followed by more than an hour of friendly questions from 230 people who paid $100 apiece to sup with the boss.

In this, the first of a number of Social Credit fund-raising dinners, we were shown a glimpse of the forces controlling this province today, and the subtle counterpoint between them and their champion.

Last year, at the Social Credit Vancouver convention, a different texture was felt. The Liberals-cum-lately held sway and the old right-wing populists who form the foundation of this party were gently squelched. Still basking in the euphoria of an election victory, few old line Socreds had the stomach for recriminations. But the tension of this uneasy coalition was ever present, especially during debate on resolutions.

Thursday night it was a different stew. The dinner guests were largely Victoria's business and professional class, Liberals or Conservatives in contexts other than the peculiar amalgams of British Columbia politics.

During the question period Victoria lawyer Ian Stewart slid between the tables gathering questioners and their queries and then announcing, Bill, so and so has a question for you. A friendly bunch on a first name basis as they sipped the dregs of Blue Nun and Black Tower and milled their questions.

Unlike the earlier convention, it was this class that organized, funded and achieved the Social Credit victory a little more than one year ago. These were the men of Social Credit industry, and I use the term "men" on purpose because there were relatively few women, a reflection more on Victoria's ethos than the new party.

A few gentlemen even turned up in black ties, as though a $100 dinner dictated a touch of class. Each table was set for six persons with an empty seventh chair for the premier who visited every board for a chat and pictures. The panelled dens of Uplands, Oak Bay and Brentwood are sure to sport these photographic memories within a few weeks.

If the ambience of the whole affair exhibited a certain starstruck pretension, it also illustrated that the people who elected the Socreds are happy with their investment. Most questions addressed to the premier were softer than the strawberry parfait dessert. They even applauded when Bennett evaded questions.

One man said he was "thrilled" every time he looked at the government's financial policies and wished he could do as well in his own business. And of course there were the bizafre queries always part of any Socred gathering. Saanich Ald. Joe Bourque is still obsessed with alleged NDP infiltration of municipal councils. An equally fair question concerns the infiltration of municipal councils by the Socreds, since both Saanich Mayor Ed Lum and Bourque were dinner guests.

Another gentleman, who described himself as "just an average professional guy" asked why the press and media should not be regulated by legislation and made responsible to the public.

"I wouldn't dare," answered Bennett with a wide grin.

Listening to the give and take, it is evident from the premier's answers he is a far more worldly man than his parochial and sometimes venal audience. Under heavy pressure from this constituency to give management the balance of power in B.C.'s liberal labor code, Bennett admonished one petitioner that he too had a responsibility to keep profits down in this time of restraint.

During another leading question on his views concerning bilingualism and national unity, the premier echoed Pierre Trudeau. On wage and price controls he parrotted Ottawa's latest line on a gradual phase-out.

A cynic might think the premier's support for federal policies is conditional on the Victoria-Ottawa economic initiatives, the outcome of which will dictate B.C.'s future economic position. But aside from this, he seems personally disposed to a Liberal view of the nation.

After more than a year as premier of this province Bill Bennett is still an enigma. Neither fish or fowl he can eloquently defend federalism and in almost the same breath say there is too much emphasis on university education.

He defends abolition of succession duties by saying the very rich never paid death duties anyway. "They had good tax lawyers — I see some of them here tonight — and accountants."

Since the wealthy salted their assets away in Switzerland and Liechtenstein it was futile trying to make them pay. That seems to be the premier's resigned philosophy on the matter. Interesting.

Watching our premier in action one can't help thinking his major problem is not the economy, labor or even governing, but keeping this coalition of the right together as he walks a narrow path down the middle of the road. To date he has kept his balance but the pressures are building as this $100 understanding subtly indicated. — G.R.O.

Levesque Plays Old Song

NEW YORK — The premier of Quebec, Rene Levesque, has been in New York this week explaining to the Economic Club why he thinks Quebec should be an independent nation and a good investment for U.S. money. He suggests some scary problems.

He is one of the most intelligent and eloquent visitors we've had around here for quite a while, but his political objective — a separate Quebec sovereign nation on our New England border, and his hope of raising American capital to demonstrate its economic viability and thus promote its separation from the Canadian union — raises such difficult and delicate questions that one almost hesitates to write about them.

Some things, however, may be said without offence. The political controversy between Rene Levesque and Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau over relations between the Provinces and the central government in Ottawa, is none of our business. And the government in Washington is being meticulously careful to avoid even the appearance of intervention in the internal affairs of Canada.

Sovereignty

But when the premier of Quebec comes here to New York, which is virtually broke, it is a fair assumption that he was not offering to lend money to Mayor Beame or to David Rockefeller at Chase Manhattan, but looking for financial aid to help achieve the separation of Quebec from the Canadian Federation.

Levesque made a very good speech. He was candid that the prime objective of his party was "political sovereignty." He said: "We believe we are a nation, with all the essential requirements: a clearly defined territory, our own history, a common language and culture, a collective will to live together and maintain a national identity."

He was also clever in his historical analogies between Quebec and the original 13 American colonies. His ancestors, he said, were among the greatest discoverers, the first white men to explore North America as far as the Rockies and Louisiana.

"Independence for Quebec, therefore," he insisted, "now appears as normal, I might say almost as inevitable, as it was for the American states of two hundred years ago . . . In my opinion, the important question . . . is not whether Quebec will become independent, nor indeed when it will happen, but how, rather, in due time, Quebecers can be expected to take full charge of their own political affairs . . ."

There is something in Levesque's historical analogy, but not much. The 13 American colonies tried the separatist route of independent commonwealths, tied loosely together, as he suggests a customs union with Ottawa, but it was a spectacular failure in the American articles of confederatin, and had to be scrapped and followed by a more perfect union centred on the federal capital and not on the states.

No doubt Canada is different, but since Levesque has come down to New York and raised these nostalgic, historic points and invited us to invest in the sovereignty of Quebec as an independent nation, maybe we have to remind him that we have been experimenting with the narrow concept of states' rights since Appomattox, and after a hundred years, are just beginning to go the other way and bring the American south into the union under Jimmy Carter. His timing here was not very good.

RENE LEVESQUE

In fact, the idea is beginning to get through to state legislatures along the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes that they have to form regional compacts to deal with their common problems to deal with one another and with Canada along the border.

Also, that they have to deal with Mexico and its eight million illegal aliens in the United States. And that even the powerful nation state centred on Washington cannot really deal with the integrity of its money, the pollution of the atmosphere, or the security of its airways — except on a worldwide basis.

Accordingly, New York has heard this eloquent and yearning voice out of Quebec with admiration — because he speaks so well and is so earnest — but with regret. The melody of separatism, like the longing of the Scots and the Welsh for independence, seems a little out of date and almost tragic.

The guess here is that Rene Levesque has misjudged the Economic Club of New York, the bankers of New York, the multinational corporations and even the press.

They are all having to deal with a different world. They all want to make money as usual, but the notion of a separate Quebec, breaking off from Ottawa, with even the possibility of a divided Canada — between the Soviet border and the United States — is not the sort of thing they are likely to invest in over the long run, even if they might fiddle with making profits in Quebec for the rest of the 1970s.

Mexico, Panama

What Levesque, bright and eloquent as he is, has apparently misunderstood is that the United States believes in Canada. It even loves its neighbor, and is startled by the thought that Canada might break down into a series of squabbling states, even if some of them wanted to join the American republic.

President Carter understood this point a little late. He sent Vice President Walter Mondale to Europe and Japan, and arranged for Secretary of State Cyrus Vance to go to the Middle East and Moscow in February of March. Only late in the agenda he invited Prime Minister Trudeau and the new president of Mexico to come to Washington.

It is high time, for Canada, and not Europe or Japan, is our most important trading partner. And Mexico is our most serious social and economic problem. Quebec, the Rio Grande, and Panama may be the most critical foreign questions for President Carter in the next four years.

Pension Indexing

It was with astonishment that I read in your paper Jan. 25 the reprint of the Toronto Star editorial, Pension Perversity. I am curious to know what interests prompted you (and also the Star) to print such a completely misleading editorial.

The federal superannuation plan calls for equal contributions to the fund by employee and employer. Currently each government employee contributes 6.5 per cent of his or her gross salary to this fund. Since the plan began in 1924, employee contributions alone have totalled $1.98 billion. Over this same period, total payments out of the fund (including indexing) have anounted to $1.86 billion dollars.

Since the start of indexing in 1970, employees have contributed an additional assessment to cover the cost of indexing. Currently this amounts to one per cent of their salary. There is no government contribution to this fund.

Summing up may I point out that both the pensions and the indexing thereof are self-supporting and at no time is the government (taxpayer) required to yield one cent of additional funds to these benefits.

From the above you will see that all the cash required to date has come from employee contributions only. What of the government's contribution to the pension fund of $1.98 billion? This appears as an IOU on the books. Instead of paying this money into the fund the government has used it to pay for other government services and has paid to the fund a nominal interest for the use of this money (four per cent prior to 1970, rising to the current 7.2 per cent). Why not tell the taxpayer how much the government saved by not borrowing this money from conventional sources at the current rates?

Referring back to the Toronto Star editorial, is it not evident that the "Harry Smiths" of this land should also be protected by some form of pension indexing? Perhaps that is what you and others fear and hence the attempts to discredit the federal government's indexing plan.—Ted and Laura Adams, 1485 Elnido Crescent.

Gum Chewers

I had the dubious privilege of attending the evening session of the legislature on Wednesday, Jan. 26. Apart from the articulate NDP member from Victoria and the dignified occupant of the press gallery engrossed in her crochet, there was little commendable behavior in the chamber. One left with the impression that British Columbia is governed for the most part by a group of ill-mannered, discourteous, gum-chewing creatures who concentrate on trading witless insults across the floor while they neglect more serious concerns of government.—Muriel W. Mixon, 23 Paddon Avenue.

Crystal Garden

I should like to ask the assistance of your readers in locating old photographs of activities and events within the old crystal garden. They are to be used for a soon-to-be-published booklet, with a foreword by Pierre Berton, on the history and architecture of this famous building. We are particularly interested in photographs of swimming meets, dog shows, flower shows, caged bird shows, graduation dances, wedding receptions, art shows, etc. We should also like to see programmes, printed invitations, award certificates, menu cards or any other memorabilia with a crystal garden theme.

Please forward your materials or write to P.O. Box 1204, Victoria, B.C. Every care will be taken to ensure that all materials used are credited properly and that loaned materials are returned in good condition.—Carolyn Smyly, Crystal Garden Preservation Society.

Tough Times for Mexico's Poor

By ALAN RIDING

MEXICO CITY — More Mexicans are appearing daily on the streets of the capital playing musical instruments for money, selling fruit on the sidewalks, "eating" fire in exchange for tips from passers-by or simply touching their stomachs as a sign of hunger and begging for the price of a meal.

Almost five months after the first devaluation of the Mexican peso in 22 years, the country's chronic social problems of poverty and unemployment have been aggravated by a deepening economic recession that is hitting hardest at those least able to defend themselves.

The huge army of underemployed, who depend for survival on occasional building site or parking lot jobs, have been most affected by the contraction of economic activity and the general belt-tightening that is taking place in business and government alike.

But even the minority of workers with regular full-time jobs are finding that many companies, particularly in such demand-sensitive industries as textiles and shoes, are cutting back on their staffs. According to one estimate, 600,000 workers were made jobless in Mexico City alone during the first two months after the peso devaluation.

And while things are already difficult for Mexico's working classes, high government officials fear the situation will deteriorate even further in the months before economic activity recovers, perhaps near the end of 1977.

"The picture is darker even than most people think," one authoritative source said. "But if we can keep a hold on prices, wages and government spending, then we'll be through the worst in a year. But don't ask me about jobs. I'd rather not think about unemployment levels."

Mexico's current economic crisis has in fact been building up for the past three years, but it was both camouflaged and postponed by massive government spending during the administration of former President Luis Echeverria Alvarez, who left office Dec. 1 last year.

High inflation, a swelling balance of payments crisis and speculation against the Mexican currency finally forced Echeverria to allow the peso to float — and, in effect, be sharply devalued — last August. Rather than impose a much needed austerity program, however, Echeverria allowed both prices and wages to rise sharply during his final three months in office.

The new government of President Jose Lopez Portillo has therefore inherited a sick economy which, in the opinion of most economists, can only be cured through a stiff dose of deflation: tight credit, lower government spending, controlled wages, upwards price "adjustments" and higher unemployment.

Translated into human terms, though, this traditional prescription for economic recovery has meant increased hardship for millions of Mexicans and, if it fails to produce results within a year or so, could bring about increased social unrest.

Barefoot children in Ciudad Obregon shantytown.

Although the government is trying to soften the blow of inflation among the poorest sectors of the population, the prices of such stable foods as corn and sugar have recently been raised. The cost of public transport, oil, electricity and gas has also been increased since devaluation and further hikes are expected in the coming months.

But the most serious problem is that of increased unemployment in a country where 15 per cent of the population is chronically jobless and a further 35 per cent or more live off occasional jobs as car-cleaners or market-porters.

With no welfare system to protect the jobless, hundreds of thousands of families have had to cut their spending to an absolute minimum. In many families, Mexican sociologists report, out-of-work and depressed fathers have taken to spending their tiny savings on drink, commiserating for hours with their friends in street-corner "cantinas" or bars.

In the slum district of Netzahualcoyotl, Jose de Anda has been averaging one day's work per week and has been forced to accept less than the $5-per-day legal minimum wage. Two of his daughters have lost their jobs as maids, while his wife is now having to feed the youngest of their 10 children with corn gruel instead of milk.

Since the devaluation, many peasants who had migrated to Mexico City in search of work are now being forced to return to their villages. "A lot of my friends have gone back home, but at least they have their families there."

Yet the situation in the countryside is no better than in depressed urban areas. Even during normal times, 70 per cent of the six million male adult peasants work less than 100 days in each year, a level of chronic underemployment that leads many of them to migrate to the cities.

But with fewer opportunities than ever in the cities, many economists believe that growing numbers of urban and rural unemployed will now try to enter the United States illegally to look for work.

Last year, more than one million Mexicans were caught while attempting to cross into the United States, although as many more were believed to have slipped past the U.S. Border Patrol.

The Lopez Portillo administration has repeatedly emphasized that the country's principal problem is unemployment and last month he obtained a commitment from the private sector to create 300,000 new jobs in the coming two years.

But even if this ambitious target is met, unemployment will continue to rise as 800,000 fresh faces enter the job market each year.

With only 15 per cent of the work force belonging to the organized labor movement, increased unemployment should not immediately result in political unrest. Earlier this month, for example, the pro-government Confederation of Mexican Workers obtained a 9 per cent rise in minimum wage levels which should bring similar increases in industrial wages in the coming months.

But while large companies have been forced to pay these higher wages, hard-pressed small firms have in many cases used the increase as an excuse for dismissing large numbers of their workers. And with demand continuing to shrink, this trend seems certain to be intensified.

The government's immediate challenge is therefore to balance the wage demands of the powerful minority or organized workers with the need to preserve the highest employment levels possible, albeit at wage levels eroded by continuing inflation.

Frustration of the wage demands of some militant unions, however, will be a major test of the strength of the labor leadership. And if work stoppages occur in this traditionally strike-free country, the new government may face the unenviable choice of breaking strikes by force or abandoning its program to rebuild the economy.

The Right to End a Life

THE GLOBE AND MAIL

Since California enacted its death-with-dignity legislation more than 1,800 people have applied for the forms that when signed will give the force of law to their rejection, in the event of a terminal illness, the use of "unusual or artificial means" of prolonging life. The applicants include the young as well as the old, the healthy as well as the gravely ill. And, viewed in the context of a society that devotes much of its energy to keeping death out of sight and out of mind, their numbers are impressive evidence that even in this age of the technological fix humanity has not lost the reverence that recognizes life as something more than mere biological existence.

In this century and especially in the past few decades medical science has been preoccupied, and properly so, with the advance of its ability to prolong life.

We now know that life is a process that can be maintained, and perhaps created, in a laboratory test tube. We know that the processes of what can be qualified, technically, as a form of life can be kept at work in a human body long after the spirit that made that body a person, a human being, has ceased to be. That state may be life, but is it human life?

Recently, as we have groped for an answer to this dilemma, we have pressed our doctors to define for us the point at which life ends and death begins. But perhaps this is the wrong question. And perhaps medical expertise is the wrong authority from which to demand an answer. What we may really want to know is when life stops being human life — not a scientific question but a spiritual, moral or philosophical one, to be answered not out of any scientific accumulation of knowledge but out of our own understanding of what it means to be human.

Framing their law the California legislators have moved with the cautious prudence the problem demands. What their law says in effect is that each human being has the right to decide for himself that human life ends when his body is beyond response to treatment and can no longer sustain its own life processes except as an extension of a machine.

To recognize that right is to begin to reaffirm the reverence for human life that has been so battered by this century of anti-human horrors and mechanical wizardry. It is to decide that, even in an age numbed by genocide and massacre and dazzled by the technological wonders of the laboratory and the lunar landing, the last word belongs to the human spirit.

The Oilman Cometh Not

By SCOTT YOUNG
The Globe and Mail

"This is the second bloody time in four weeks that I've wakened to a cold house because those jerks didn't deliver oil," a Toronto householder said to me demurely, dialling again the 24-hour home fuel oil number of a major oil company. The busy signal had been on for a maddening length of time.

However, there is an easy explanation which I just happen to have here with me. The major oil companies are trying to get out of the home fuel oil business by a process of driving people nuts.

As it was explained to me peevishly by one executive, "It's a hell of a lot of trouble selling oil to people, you know! I mean, guys have to go out in all kinds of weather to make deliveries! So a few years ago we got these computers and programmed them to tell us when deliveries should be made, by figuring out the cubic inches in a place and then adding in, you know, the size of the fuel tank and the guy's hat size and the outside temperatures and so on, to decide how long a tank of oil would last, and make deliveries accordingly."

I asked, "You mean just before the oil runs out?" "Not at all, dear boy," he laughed. "My goodness, are you green! The idea is to make delivery after they run out. Not so long after that their pipes freeze, or anything, they might sue, but just long enough after the furnace has quit that, you know, kids refuse to get out of bed and put their feet on the cold floor and go to school, and like that. And long enough after that Mother is standing there just fuming, ha ha, while she keeps getting a busy signal." He wiped away the tears of mirth. "Oh, there must be some very funny scenes, you know; women in tattered old dressing gowns with their teeth rattling like castanets, and like that."

★ ★ ★

"But what do you do when they call to complain?" I asked.

"That's really the best part!" he said. "When they finally get us on the phone, we have several methods of dealing with that emergency. We have a very well-rounded staff. One guy does nothing but mumble that he is just the janitor, and don't know nothing. Another guy says, 'Just a minute, I'll get Charlie,' and then never comes back. But our best guy is beautiful. He has a sort of lofty accent and he lectures people that the sudden cold spell caught all the oil companies unawares, and there must have been something about the wind direction, etc., etc., but that an emergency service man will be right around with enough oil to keep the furnace going until the regular truck arrives."

"But he really does send somebody around?"

"Ah, who knows?"

"But isn't that cruel? I mean, these people probably watched your TV commercials and really expect something to happen when they run out of oil, and call you."

"Aren't you getting a little ugly?" he said menacingly.

I said soothingly, "But how would you do it yourself, if you had an oil furnace and wanted never to run out of oil, you know, be sure of dependability, like it used to be in the old days?"

"I would check the yellow pages under Oils (Fuel)," he said. "Avoid any major oil company. They all use computers. Find some guy who advertises that his service is personalized, not computerized. Call him up — and get off our backs, will ya?"

Those Wigeons With a Difference

If you think one wigeon looks pretty much like any other wigeon, you've got another think coming. And there are at least half-a-dozen different looking wigeons around Victoria these days that can prove it.

Instead of the white crown and forehead of the ordinary kind of wigeon we see here in the hundreds every year, these fellows sport a rich creamy-white, almost peach colored forehead and crown. Not much of a difference I know, but let us proceed because beneath these so-called "bald pates" things take on a different hue.

For example, your run-of-the-mill wigeon sports a neat, iridescent green patch on each side of his head which starts at each eye and trails around behind his head. Below these, his cheeks are mottled grey. On the other hand, those wigeons-with-a-difference have the whole "face" bathed in a deep rich red-brown. That alone makes them stand out in a crowd.

At this point some of you may wonder, if our topic is wigeons-with-a-difference, what all those little chaps are that hang out with the wigeons but fit neither of these descriptions. Good point, but easily answered: those "little chaps" are the ladies of the clan. And since this story is about two species of wigeon, and since the females of either species are indistinguishable in the field, we can dispense with them now. They are no longer part of the wigeon-with-a-difference story.

But let me put your mind at ease; there is good reason for the differences I've described. In one case they represent our familiar North American Wigeon; in the other, a straggler from the far reaches of northern Asia, the Eurasian Wigeon — better known in these parts as the European Wigeon.

The Eurasian Wigeon, when he's at home, lists among his residences such widely-separated parts of the goble as Iceland and Siberia. And when he's not at home, that is when he's living up to his reputation as a prodigious straggler, he might be found anywhere from Novaya Zemlya to the Azores.

Every year when the Eurasian Wigeons migrate south out of their boreal homes a few spill out across the Atlantic and Pacific, and spread along the coasts of North America to make the winter birdwatching of the New World watchers just a little more interesting.

On the Pacific coast, they can be found almost anywhere from northern Vancouver Island to Mexico. Around Victoria this year they've been frequenting such well-known birding spots as Esquimalt Lagoon, Panama Flats, the rocks in Juan de Fuca off Victoria Golf Course, and — the most easily approached — at the little pond on Dallas Road at the foot of Government Street.

There seems to have been a steady increase in the numbers of these stragglers in recent years. At the moment it isn't possible to be sure if this increase is actual or the result of many more birdwatchers just exposing what has always been the case.

Whatever the reason, Eurasian Wigeon are here every winter but so far are not known to nest in North America. They do occur in small numbers during the nesting season along the outer Aleutian Islands but the almost perpetual fogs and mists of these distant islands have effectively hidden any evidence that the Eurasian Wigeon might have established a bridgehead there.

Except in full adult male plumage, the North American and Eurasian Wigeons are almost impossible to tell apart. Worse still, they seem to get along well together — the lone Eurasians being absorbed into the gangs of wintering North Americans without any apparent friction. They even behave much the same, and in the melee of selecting mates, which usually takes place at this time of year, the Eurasians go through the same motions as their New World counterparts.

Whether these motions ever amount to more than just that is still a moot point, but two records of hybrids between European and North American Wigeon suggest that occasionally they do. They also suggest that the differences between the two species are more apparent than real and that, in fact, they may be no more than the same species with two-color variations.

And that wouldn't be anything new — take the so-called "Blue" Goose that kept scientists and birdwatchers guessing for years until it was discovered to be a color phase of the Snow Goose.

But, color phase or not, at the moment these two wigeon are separate species and, if you want to prove to yourself that when you've seen one wigeon you haven't seen them all, drop down to Holland Pool.

TOMORROW IS ANOTHER DAY!...

'The future of Canada is bright'

So said the Cowichan Leader of Duncan in March, 1946, just months after the end of World War II. Canadian energies turn homeward and the economy moves to domestic concerns. B.C.'s Liberal Minister of Agriculture Frank Putnam declares "British Columbia—great in war, must be greater still in peace!"

Long-established in Duncan, J.H. Whittome & Co. Ltd. had been open for business for eight years in the Capital City. ["You won't last six months" business associates warned Robert W. Whittome who is still president, in 1938.]

But despite those dire Depression-tinged warnings, both the company's offices in Duncan and Victoria prospered, well-prepared to move with the times into a new era characterized by dramatic expansion in Canadian business and industry—particularly in Real Estate, a market poised on the brink of 25 years of intense competition and nearly continuous growth.

And those same values established by James H. Whittome nearly 80 years ago apply more than ever today as the company continues to grow: integrity, service and the human touch.

Today there are six branch offices on Vancouver Island, with a modern spacious office in downtown Victoria and an active, growing office in Royal Oak. Rithet Agencies Ltd., another distinguished Victoria Real Estate and Insurance firm established in 1871, recently merged with Whittome's.

Their combined staffs offer full professional services in INSURANCE, REAL ESTATE, MORTGAGES, PROPERTY MANAGEMENT, TRAVEL, and APPRAISALS.

Zeller's

Common shares of Zeller's Ltd. were increased to 25,000,000 from 13,600,000 and authorized capital increased to $75 million from $7 million at a special shareholders meeting.

Dissenting shareholders spoke out against the increase in the department store's authorized capital because it is the first step toward a share exchange by which Zeller's would absorb Fields Stores Ltd. of Vancouver.

D. N. Byers, chairman of the Zeller's board, said Dominion Securities Corp. Harris and Partners Ltd. had assessed a fair value for the share exchange at three Zeller's shares for one Fields share.

But some shareholders attending the meeting questioned the three-to-one figure. Albert Turnau of L'Orignal, Ont., said a 1.5-to-one ratio would be fair while Fred Wright of Pemberton Securities calculated that a value of 3.4-to-one better reflected the comparative values of the companies.

TCPL

Trans-Canada PipeLines Ltd. has reported net income of $66,329,000 or $1.84 a share for the year ended Dec. 31, 1976, compared with $52,434,000 or $1.65 a share for the previous year.

Operating revenue increased by 63 per cent to $1.5 billion, the company said. Cost of gas sold, gathering charges and acquisition costs increased to $1.1 billion from $601 million.

The dividend on common shares for the quarter ended Dec. 31, 1976, has been increased to 23.76 cents from 22 cents.

James W. Kerr, chairman and chief executive officer, said in a preliminary report to shareholders that the company will seek National Energy Board approval to construct a pipeline from Saint John, N.B., to the Maine border.

Construction is planned for 1981 as part of a project in which liquefied natural gas would be imported from Algeria to Saint John for delivery to eastern United States markets.

Union Carbide

Union Carbide Corp. reports higher profits in 1976 compared with 1975 as well as an increase in the fourth quarter of last year.

The company said earnings for 1976 rose to $441 million or $7.15 a share on sales of $6.35 billion.

This compares with 1975 figures of $382 million in net profits or $6.29 a share on sales of $5.67 billion.

In the fourth quarter of 1976 profits rose to $105 million or $1.69 a share on sales of $1.63 billion. In the 1975 fourth quarter, earnings were $81 million or $1.31 a share on sales of $1.43 billion.

Union Carbide said it plans to spend about $1 billion this year on capital projects compared with $970 million spent last year.

Research and development spending in 1976 rose about 18 per cent from 1975 to $142 million and is expected to increase another 10 per cent this year, the company said.

Uranium Activities Continue

SASKATOON (CP)—Private and Crown corporations involved in uranium mining and exploration are reported continuing scheduled activities in Saskatchewan despite the announcement of a public inquiry into uranium development in the province.

Only Amok Ltd. is not proceeding with plans because it has not yet received a conditional permit from the atomic energy control board allowing it to proceed with development plans for the next year.

The French-based company had hoped to move heavy equipment into the Cluff Lake area of northern Saskatchewan where its proposed mine and milling operation would be located during the winter months. One convoy of trucks has gone into the camp but the firm has delayed further shipments until a conditional permit is received.

Neil Byers, Saskatchewan's environment minister, announced Dec. 23 that a board of inquiry would hold public hearings and recommend whether Amok should be allowed to proceed, as well as consider the implications of expansion of the provincial uranium industry.

He said all uranium mine developers in the exploration or pre-construction sites would be proceeding at their own risk pending the outcome of the inquiry and subsequent government decisions.

Other companies involved in uranium mining development in Saskatchewan include Eldorado Nuclear Ltd., a federal Crown corporation now considering construction of a refinery near Warman, and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corp. (SMDC), a provincial government company conducting uranium exploration work in the North.

Gordon Burton, Eldorado's corporate affairs director, said the company will soon begin the first phase of an environmental impact study at the Warman site and hopes to know by spring what the province's intentions regarding uranium mining are.

Provincial environment department officials have said they do not expect the board of inquiry to have its report ready until at least September.

$8M ENVIRONMENT FUND

RICHMOND, Va. (WP) — Allied Chemical Corp., Friday promised to create an $8 million environmental fund for Virginia, and, in return, asked a federal judge here to cut its record $13.2 million Kepone pollution fine to $1.4 million.

Judge Robert Merhige promised Allied lawyers he will cut the fine, the largest ever imposed in a criminal pollution case in the United States, but said the size of the reduction will depend on recommendations he will receive Tuesday from Virginia and federal justice department lawyers.

"You're going to get a reduction, let's put it that way, providing that the $8 million is still floating around," the judge said at one point in a brief courtroom hearing Friday.

But both Merhige and U.S. Attorney William Bummings, who prosecuted the Allied case, appeared concerned that proceeds from the $8 million fund might be used to pay for projects that Allied Chemical might already be liable for because of its Kepone pollution.

Cummings said he wanted to be certain that the fund would not find itself "going down the same path" with Allied, paying for certain Kepone-related expenses that Allied should have to pay regardless of the criminal fine, such as damages resulting from civil suits filed against the chemical firm.

Allied directors meeting in New York Thursday agreed to endow an $8 million environmental fund, said that the commitment stands regardless of what happens to the $13.2 million fine. Allied lawyer Murray Janus told Merhige, "We're on the hook for the $8 million."

War Drug Got Soldier Stoned

DUGWAY, Utah (UPI) — A U.S. army specialist is recovering from the hallucinogenic effects of being exposed to a chemical warfare agent at Dugway proving grounds.

Doctors said Ronald Mutchko was improving today but was still having hallucinations of "colored beasts, butterflies and boxes," and hearing voices.

They said he was responding to treatment and his heart rate was slowing down but they still listed him as in "serious" condition.

Army officials, meanwhile, said Friday they still were investigating the Thursday incident which they described as "an isolated case, an occupational hazard" of their program to get rid of stockpiles of the weapons at the Utah desert base.

Mutchko was hospitalized after coming in contact with the agent BZ while he and another soldier were opening cluster bombs to determine what chemical agent was in them so they could be "demilitarized."

Mutchko and Sgt. Richard Mahan were treated at the base hospital and then flown to University Medical Centre in Salt Lake City.

Mahan was released after 24 hours of observation but Mutchko still was hospitalized, suffering from hallucinations and periodic increases in his heartbeat.

Dr. Thomas Caine, the attending physician, said Mutchko was "conscious but delirious" and was being injected with a drug to control his heart rate.

He said there would be no long-term side effects from the chemical agent, but Mutchko probably will suffer from the symptoms for about four days.

Pipeline Conditions Stated

PORT ANGELES (AP) — At least three conlitions must be met before the Coalition Against Oil Pollution will support a northern Tier Pipeline Co. proposal for an oil port here, a coalition spokesman says.

Bob Lynette, coalition president, said the group will withdraw its support if Northern Tier renages on promises not to build petrochemical plants and refineries and to run its oil line around Puget Sound instead of across it.

"And we will not let anything be built unless all four existing refineries at Cherry Point and Anacortes agree to hook up to the pipeline," he told a three-member panel of No Oil Port leaders during a debate over the issue.

The No Oil Port group adamantly opposes building an oil port here and hooking it up to a pipeline which would run around the sound to the U.S. Midwest, as Northern Tier has proposed.

Norma Turner, president of No Oil Port, accused the coalition of being blind to the perils of pipeline spills. "The pipeline would cross innumerable rivers . . . and we're not the only ones who are concerned about that," she said.

She added that Governor Dixy Lee Ray, state officials and representatives of various city and country governments all have expressed reservations.

"No Oil Port does not have a patent on the paranoia of pipelines," she said. "But the coalition is so blind all they can see are the risks of tankers."

Lynette, a reliability engineer from Seattle, said that if all the three conditions were not met, the coalition would delay the Northern Tier project in legal channels if necessary.

The coalition includes environmentalists, tourist-industry representatives, commercial fishermen and other opposed to increased tanker traffic.

CARTER TALK WEDNESDAY

WASHINGTON (WP) — Presdent Carter will make his first report to the people of the U.S. in a televised talk from the White House next Wednesday night, press secretary Jody Powell said Friday.

Also, Carter will hold his first press conference since his inauguration the following week, either Feb. 7 or 8.

But the president, however, does not plan to address Congress in the near future to give his own State of the Union address or other such message, Powell said.

Carter's talk from the White House, the first of the so-called "fireside chats" that he promised during the campaign, will be at 7 p.m. PST.

Whoopers Number 99

REGINA (CP) — There now are 99 whooping cranes in the world, the highest number since a conservation program began in 1961, a news release from the Saskatchewan Museum of Natural History says.

Of the total, 76 birds are wild and the other 23 are captive.

The young birds and all known adults safely made the 2,500-mile fall migration to a wildlife refuge in Texas.

There were 40 sightings of whooping cranes reported to the museum this fall by Saskatchewan residents.

Good weather, and absence of natural disasters and disease and growing public awareness were the reasons given for the successful migration.

In 1939 there were only 14 whooping cranes known to be in existance.

Ottawa Blacklist Denied to the End

By IAIN HUNTER

OTTAWA — Cabinet secretary Michael Pitfield denied that any "blacklist" of civil servants considred security risks ever existed only four months before the opposition revealed such a list in the Commons.

Pitfield, who was a deputy secretary to the cabinet in 1971 when the list of members of the so-called Extra-Parliamentary Opposition was circulated among cabinet ministers, made the denial in a letter written last Sept. 30 to Walter Rudnicki, a Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. employee who has claimed he was fired because he was one of the 21 EPO members identified.

The Ontario Supreme Court found that Rudnicki was wrongfully dismissed.

Pitfield said at the time that such a document could hardly have been circulated without his knowledge.

He told the former federal civil servant that he knew nothing of any blacklist of public servants and added that "there never will be one as long as I'm around."

His letter was made public Friday by Elmer MacKay (PC — Central Nova).

Solicitor-General Francis Fox, meanwhile, said Friday he does not know whether public servants listed as "suspect" in a 1971 cabinet memo were given a chance to clear their names.

NDP Leader Ed Broadbent noted that under a 1963 policy established by the late prime minister Lester Pearson, a government department was to inform an employee whose security status had been questioned. The object was to give the employee a chance to clear his name.

Fox told Broadbent in the Commons that it would have been up to the departments to tell their employees about the 1971 situation and he did not know whether this had been done.

MacKay asked Justice Minister Ron Basford whether he would investigate the extent to which those on the EPO list have had their careers affected by being identified in it and whether Rudnicki has been offered compensation or reparation for the way in which he was dealt with.

Basford said such an investigation is up to the solicitor-general to make and noted that Rudnicki was compensated by order of the Ontario Supreme Court.

Conservative House Leader Walter Baker asked what steps are being taken to see that other civil servants don't receive the same unfair treatment as Rudnicki received.

Treasury Board President Bob Andras replied that any actions taken as a result of the Pitfield letter were up to the individual departments concerned and noted that Rudnicki's dismissal didn't occur until "one or two years" after the letter was written.

"With regard to continuing investigations, I do not see any necessity for that at this time," Andras declared.

AECL Charges Mulled

OTTAWA (CP) — Trade Minister Jean Chretien said Friday the government will look into the possibility of charges against Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. officials over the keeping of minutes at board meetings.

Progressive Conservative Opposition members say poor minutes, were kept of board meetings and that may have been a violation of the Canada Corporations Act.

Asked about it in the Commons, Chretien, the acting prime minister, replied that it was not in his jurisdiction, "but we will look into it."

Earlier in the week, AECL officials told a Commons committee inquiring into agent's arrangements in the foreign sale of nuclear reactors that they felt the minutes were adequate to meet the requirements of corporate law.

The issue arises over the failure of the company to record in its meetings any resolutions authorizing the hiring of agents, although the company executives say the board did give its approval.

Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie said later "I can only say the minutes are being kept differently now."

The committee is looking into a report from the auditor-general that insufficient documentation exists to back $10.5 million of the $17.8 million paid to agents in sales to South Korea and Argentina.

Letters have been sent to a Swiss bank and Italimpianti of Genoa seeking more information on the agent in the Argentinian deal.

AECL paid $2.4 million into an account at the Banca della Swizzera Italiania in Lugano, Switzerland, on the instructions of Italimpianti, its partner in the sale.

But the Canadian company says it does not know the name of the agent involved.

Big Car Surtax Bill Approved by MPs

Times News Services

OTTAWA — MPs gave final approval Friday to a tax bill that adds a $100 surtax on cars equipped with air conditioning units and eliminates excise taxes on solar energy equipment.

Provisions in the bill, which now goes to the Senate for royal assent, have been in effect since they were announced by Finance Minister Donald Macdonald in the budget last May.

At that time, the government also announced increased taxes on heavy cars but the proposal was withdrawn in September as the government gave way to pressure form the car industry.

During debate on the bill Friday, Max Saltsman (NDP —Waterloo Cambridge) said the government should reconsider the air conditioner tax as it did the heavy car tax, because "air conditioners might not be especially important in terms of energy consumption."

The bill also means the removal of federal sales tax on such things as solar furnaces, heating panels, wind-powered generators and other equipment "which contribute directly to the development of energy sources other than fossil fuels."

Saltsman said the surtax on cars and other vehicles with air conditioning units might be counter productive, generating greater costs than savings.

Sales and excise tax cuts would encourage motorists to buy lighter cars — but they might buy two small cars instead of a single heavier one, Mr. Macondlad told the Commons.

He said taxation on automobiles is a legitimate form of revenue production and the government does not intend to abandon it.

Sinclair Stevens (PC—York Simcoe said the government should institute tax cuts for lighter cars as an alternative to the legislation which imposes weight taxes on heavier cars.

Cars weighing less than 4,425 pounds are not subject to the tax. A range of steadily increasing taxes is imposed on most cars weighing more. However, the 4,425-pound limit is increased to 5,000 pounds for station wagons and vans used primarily as passenger vehicles.

X-RAYS DOUBLE CHANCE OF LIFE

TORONTO (CP) — Dr. W. D. Rider told the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons on Friday that x-raying the pelvis a few hours before surgery to remove an advanced cancer of the rectum doubles a patient's chances of living five years.

The radiation only lengthens survival of patients with rectal cancers which have already grown completely through the rectum wall into adjoining tissue and spread into the lymph nodes.

Dr. Rider, reporting on a study by himself and several other doctors, said the study was almost allowed "to die a natural death," because it revealed no early trend towards a significant difference in results.

But by 1974, a trend began to show and a final update last summer confirmed a statistically significant difference in survival.

Dr. Rider said patients with a cancer on the surface of the rectum wall have an 80-percent chance of living five years or more.

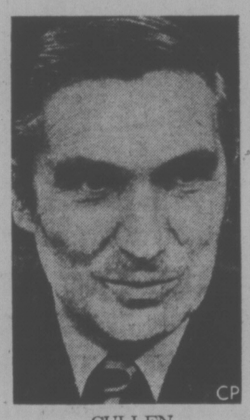
Quebec, Ottawa Working On Manpower Compromise

OTTAWA (CP) — The Quebec and federal immigration ministers agreed Friday to seek a compromise on the question of English - language courses for immigrants in Quebec.

Jacques Couture, Quebec minister of manpower and immigration, told reporters after a meeting with his federal counterpart Bud Cullen that Quebec wants full control over the selection of immigrants for language courses.

Cullen said later this is an area of joint responsibility, and the federal government is not prepared to withdraw. But he said he wanted to avoid confrontation, and would seek to work out new selection procedures.

In a letter to the Quebec minister during their meeting, Mr. Cullen expressed regret at the Quebec decision to end English courses at the federally-funded but provincially-run - Centres d'Orientation et Formation d'Immigrants.



CULLEN

He said Canada Manpower Centres have directed immigrants to study English only if they already have some knowledge of French. The courses were aimed solely at helping them find employment.

About 100 to 120 people are immediately affected, he said.

"Your decision would not only result in making Quebec less attractive to Francophone immigrants, but would also have a negative impact on both unemployed individuals and their ethnic communities," his letter stated.

PCs Seek Early End For AIB

OTTAWA (FP) — The Progressive Conservatives will introduce a Commons motion on April 1 calling for an early end to the wage and price controls program, Sinclair Stevens (PC—York Simcoe) Tory spokesman announced Friday.

He said the Progressive Conservatives remain convinced there should be an early termination of the program.

The action April 1 would be in accord with provisions in the controls legislation.

It provides that at any time after March 31, 1977 and before July 1, 1977 a motion may be introduced into the house calling for an end to the controls before their automatic expiry date of Dec. 31, 1978.

The motion must be signed by not less than 50 members.

Ed Broadbent, national leader of the New Democratic Party, said during the parliamentary Christmas recess that his party was prepared to introduce a motion calling for the early termination of the program.

BAETZ SAID NO

OTTAWA (CP) — Reuben Baetz, executive director of the Canadian Council on Social Development, said Friday that he never agreed to join a newly-formed group to advise Opposition Leader Joe Clark.

Baetz said in a statement that he was invited to join Clark's policy advisory council several months ago but refused after being told he would have to quit his job on the social development council if he accepted.

Clark earlier this month included Baetz in a list of 21 he said would give him policy advice.

The committee is headed by Toronto psychologist and business executive Reva Gerstein and held its first meeting here last Sunday.

The Canadian Press reported erroneously Thursday that Baetz attended the meeting.

Baetz said there was an obvious "breakdown in communications" which led Clark to believe that he was a member of the policy advisory group.

He said he did not attend the first meeting and, in fact never accepted Mr. Clark's invitation to join.

'Becoming Nuisance,' Student-Thief Jailed

A young man who got A grades studying university subjects behind bars was sentenced in Victoria county court Friday to three more months in jail for being in possession of a stolen car.

After hearing of better than average intelligence of Gary Kenneth Sarson, alias Bowen, 20, together with a lengthy list of previous convictions, Judge E. J. C. Stewart commented:

"You're getting to be what I call a criminal nuisance.

"I've examined your record and find nothing particularly terrible about it, but if you continue in this way you are going to have to be kept behind bars."

Sarson, of Winnipeg, pleaded not guilty to stealing a 1967 Beaumont car, property of Edward Bailey, from the Red Lion Inn parking lot on Dec. 3, 1976, and entered a guilty plea to having the car in his possession.

Stewart dismissed the first charge after the accused pleaded guilty to the second.

His record included convictions for theft, breaking and entering with intent, parole violation, attempted breaking and entering with intent and taking a car without owner's consent, all in Winnipeg.

In Calgary he was convicted for possession of stolen property and possession of a concealed weapon, and in Victoria for loitering by night and is serving three months for that.

During a previous sentence, court was told, Sarson obtained Grade 12 subjects and went on to study first-year university courses, intending to earn some money and register at university.

Stewart concurred with a provincial court recommendation that the accused man be sent to a forestry camp for the balance of his sentence, of which one month has been served, and recognized that he had been in custody since early December.

Lawrence Warren Geary, 30, of 2920 Blackwood, was sentenced to one day in jail and fined $100 or 14 days when he pleaded guilty to charges of being in possession of cannabis resin and marijuana Jan. 13.

When police checked him at 2:15 a.m. they found separately-wrapped quantities totalling one ounce of hashish in Geary's possession, and when they searched his dweling place 13 hours later they discovered an ounce of marijuana. The accused man was charged with possession of hashish for the purpose of trafficking, and of simple possession of marijuana. He pleaded not guilty to the inclusive charge of possession for the purpose of trafficking and the court accepted his guilty plea to simple possession on both counts.

Geary had a previous history of theft, possession and trafficking, but had spent 15 days in jail awaiting trial, during which court was told his sister died, his child fell ill and his wife was hurt in an accident.

Smash Kills Three

CALGARY (CP) — Three men died when a tanker truck carrying 7,000 gallons of diesel fuel was in head-on collision with an empty cattle liner.

The trucks exploded and were totally destroyed by fire in the accident on Highway 1 near Bassano, 90 miles southeast of Calgary.

Two men were in the cattle liner and one man in the tanker but they have not been identified, RCMP said Friday.

Judgment Reserved

Mr. Justice J. G. Gould reserved judgment this week on a Port Alberni logger's appeal against $17,000 in logging taxes assessed by the B.C. minister of finance.

Oscar Henry Guldager, 55, claimed his income from logging was incorrectly calculated for 1968-75 inclusive, and that taxes should have been determined from net profit on the sale of logs.

The appeal was heard Thursday in B.C. Supreme Court chambers.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

Two teenagers who were caught inside a bar during the early morning hours Jan. 13 received $100 fines Friday in Victoria provincial court.

Carl Walter Newcombe, 18, of 4334 Northridge Crescent, and 17-year-old Richard Sutter, of 3365 Quadra, pleaded guilty Jan. 13 to a break-in at the Tally-Ho Travelodge, 3020 Douglas. Victoria city police caught the pair in the bar area at about 3:30 a.m., gathering money and liquor.

Judge William Ostler, looking over pre-sentence reports he had ordered for both, noted they were "drifting towards ruin" by indulging in alcohol at a young age.

Besides the fines, Ostler imposed one-year probations, 100 hours of community service work, any drug or alcohol counselling suggested by the probation officer, and a ban on entering any licenced premise for each.

Four men facing two counts of trafficking in drugs had two more charges read to them Friday, including another one for trafficking.

John Elvin Cook, 27, of 1251 Pembroke, Craig Alan Davis, 23, of 3255 Cook, and Rodney Trevor Johnson, 25, and David Charles Smith, 22, both of 2600 Dowler Place, are all expected to have a date for preliminary hearing set Monday.

They were jointly charged Wednesday with possession of opium tablets and codeine for the purpose of trafficking after a drug raid late Tuesday afternoon at Davis' residence. On Friday, charges of possession of stolen pharmaceutical drugs and possession of controlled drugs for the purpose of trafficking were added.

Bail was denied Davis, who chose to have his bail hearing Friday. The other three elected to wait until Monday for a bail hearing.

Jodous Antonios Van Bree, of 1725 Feltham, was charged Jan. 15 after Saanich police, investigating a family dispute, found the prohibited weapon in Van Bree's pocket.

After hearing that the man was an admitted alcoholic, Ostler placed him on six months' probation, ordered him to continue with a voluntary program for alcoholics, and imposed a ban on entering any licenced premise during the six months. In addition, Ostler ordered the weapon confiscated.

Skipping out after eating a $5.40 meal cost a 36-year-old man 14 days in jail.

Leonard Baronette, of no fixed address, pleaded guilty to obtaining food by fraud and was handed the jail term because of previous convictions for the same offence.

Court was informed Baronette ordered and ate the meal at Coffee Mac's, 617 Gorge Road East, Jan. 22 and walked out without paying. Baronette had 10 cents in his pocket at the time, court was told.

Asked by Ostler if he had anything to say, Baronette offered to pay restitution.

BLUEPEACE: SOME BIG DOUBTS

Symbolic Protest Flopped But What a Day to Cherish

Never have I mourned the passing of a single day as much as I did this day one week ago.

For on Sunday I turned 40. And it was such a traumatic change, I really haven't got used to the idea yet. Maybe I never will.

It's strange, too, as there is no visible hurdle to clamber over. But quite suddenly it seems you've gone around the bend in life or over the hill, as it were. You're not quite an oldie but you're in what many kindly call the "masters" class. And everything even remotely physical you now attack with much greater vigor and enthusiasm to prove you can still do it.

And that is strange in my case for I feel I'm in as good a shape as your average 40-year-old, though perhaps not your average Swedish 40-year-old I'm not that much overweight, can still manage the odd game of squash and tennis, have a few hairs left on my head and even had a good dental checkup a couple of days ago with no cavities. (Mr. Goodwin would be pleased!)

At least, I didn't spend my birthday hiding from the world and brooding like Elvis did when he turned "fat and 40" two years ago. No, I ventured out on the high seas and had a marvellous day relaxing in the sun and salt air and feeling very close to nature.

I had been invited by Dr. Harry Carter to go for a cruise aboard his 36-foot trawler Tedmac out into the waters of Juan de Fuca Strait.

Carter is the Victoria orthopedic surgeon who recently became so incensed while watching TV programs on the rash of oil tanker mishaps that he founded Bluepeace, a group to fight tanker-traffic in Canadian waters.

I would like to say at this stage that, though I try to be positive whenever I can, I simply don't believe Bluepeace will ever achieve the success and the notoriety of the Greenpeace Foundation.

Like many other people, I'm deeply concerned about the possible destruction of our coastline and believe we should put as much pressure on our politicians as we can to make sure it doesn't happen. But can Bluepeace as a group be effective or is it just an emotion outburst?

Bluepeace has held two public meetings — one in Sooke and one in Victoria — at which the need to oppose an application now before the National Energy Board by a consortium of American-controlled oil companies to put a pipeline from Kitimat to Edmonton to transport oil to the U.S. was stressed. It has elected Virginia Gareau as Victoria president; delegated former Liberal leader David Anderson and a committee with the responsiblity of producing a pamphlet on the oil-spill problem; and has even come up with a catchy Bluepeace logo — a fish crying tears of oil.

Yet there are at least 10 environmental groups on the Mainland, including Save Our Shores based in Prince Rupert and COAST (Coalition Against Super Tankers) that have been wrestling with the problem now for about eight months. And throughout, the public has been apathetic.

It's just a little sad, but I can't see people being any different toward Bluepeace. Take the meeting in Victoria last Saturday.

Despite all the warnings that this is B.C.'s No. 1 environmental problem, there were only about 200 people scattered throughout the 600-seat Newcombe Auditorium. As one man there said:

"You are talking to the converted, otherwise we wouldn't be here." Then he glanced around the hall. "But, if this is all the converted there are in Victoria then God help the coasts of B.C.!"

Dr. Carter's voyage the next day was meant to be a symbolic protest. He phoned the Mayor of Port Angeles to see if a flotilla of boats owned by concerned environmentalists might sail out to meet us, sort of hands across the water and all that.

Fine idea, the mayor told Carter. Only problem was the Americans don't like to go out in the Strait in winter and he couldn't find any volunteers.

So as a symbolic thing it was a flop. But we (Carter and I and a crew of young environmentalists from the Provincial Museum and UVic) went anyway. It became, instead, a pleasure cruise as we chugged out around Race Rocks, stopped at Beecher Bay for lunch and then made it home just before dark.

But I really enjoyed it. I love the sea, and I didn't even know that just that short distance from downtown Victoria there were sealions frolicking all over Race Rocks. It was marvellous to watch them and to hear them bark and know that was natural. No man had planned it, built a cage for them. And I realized at that moment just how much protecting our environment means.

And so perhaps our day wasn't completely wasted. We didn't protest to anyone. We weren't very symbolic. Yet perhaps we were . . .

"Why should I vacation in Paris or Rome?" Harry Carter asked as he watched the sealions basking in the sun while the gulls circled above. "To me, this is everything."

Challenge Hurled At Premier

The head of the 35,000-member B.C. Government Employees Union challenged Premier Bennett on Friday to prove his claim that civil servants are paid better than their counterparts in private business.

John Fryer said that allegation isn't true and produced figures he said proved it.

He also told the premier: "We are not about to subsidize the government by agreeing to a cheap labor policy."

And finally, he said Bennett should stay out of contract bargaining. "There is no place for politicians in the bargaining process."

Fryer's comments come in response to remarks by Premier Bennett at a $100-a-plate Social Credit fund-raising dinner Wednesday night.

Bennett told his audience he thinks public employees' wages should follow private sector rates. The former New Democratic Party government pushed public servant wages higher than the other, he said. "This year we hope to bring some sanity back."

B.C. Hydro employees in particular would have to trim their expectations, said Bennett.

The premier's comments come as union members are in the process of a mail ballot on long-delayed contract terms.

They are being offered a $25-a-month increase together with a $123 lump sum retroactive payment. That falls short of an offer which was rejected earlier but is being recommended for acceptance by the union's bargaining committee.

The BCGEU says the earlier offer was withdrawn by the cabinet after the day of protest Oct. 14 against federal wage controls. Anti-inflation regulations make it impossible to press for a better settlement now, it adds.

Fryer said he doesn't think the premier's comments will affect outcome of the mail balloting, to be completed by next Friday.

"I think our people are mature enough to keep the two issues separate. But my worst fear now is that I think the government is intent on a confrontation."

The union spokesman offered these figures to refute the premier's claim:

A draftsman in the public service gets $5.78 an hour in contrast to $6.07 in the private sector.

A laborer in government service gets $7.10, elsewhere $9.10.

"It is incumbent upon the premier to document those cases in which we are allegedly ahead of the private sector," Fryer said.

As the largest employer in the province, the government is better able than most to pay equal wages, he claimed.

Any move to hold down provincial government wages would tend to depress the economy in Victoria, affecting directly a block of 10,000 wage earners.

About three-quarters of that total are in the BCGEU and the rest in management positions, said Fryer.

On the premier's reference to B.C. Hydro employees, the union spokesman said Bennett should remember it was his father, former premier W. A. C. Bennett, who made the high wage settlements with the unions at Hydro. It had nothing to do with the NDP, he contended.

Beautiful Mary Jane

The English poet John Keats once wrote truth was beauty and beauty truth, and that was all a person ever really needed to know.

But it didn't work for Frederick William Andrew, 32, of 1043 Verdier, when he appeared before Judge William Ostler in provincial court Friday charged with possession of a marijuana plant.

The Central Saanich man admitted growing the plant but told police he grew it "to tell the truth simply because it was a beautiful plant."

"I suppose beauty IS in the eyes of the beholder," Ostler remarked.

But he fined Andrew $100.

Marguerite 'Almost Broke Even'

The British Columbia Steamship Co. Ltd., which runs the Princess Marguerite, showed a loss of $1,073,730 for the year ended Dec. 31, 1976, says a report tabled Friday by Transport Minsiter Jack Davis.

Davis said the vessel "almost broke even" last year, saying the statement was deceptive in that financing, refits and other items are not normally included in it.

The more than $1 million loss, coupled with a deficit of $213,960 from the previous year, left the over-all deficit at $1,287,690.

One of the charges against the 1976 operation is for $410,000, the estimated cost of the refit to get the Marguerite operational for this summer's run between Victoria and Seattle.

Liquor sales totalled $197,073, the newsstand $116,568 and dayrooms $79,146 for a total income from all services of $933,240.

Relief, Worry in Wake Of Legalization Move

Spokesmen for apartment building and condominium owners expressed relief Friday but firemen were worried after word that four-storey frame buildings are once again legal in B.C.

Housing Minister Hugh Curtis said amendments to the B.C. Building Code had been made to make the four-storey wood buildings conforming.

That had been their status until July of last year when an appeal board decision declared the interpretation wrong, making all such structures non-conforming.

The ruling meant that if such a building was destroyed by fire, any frame building replacing it would have to be one floor less.

Owners would lose a quarter of their revenue-producing property unless they went to more expensive concrete construction in replacements.

And a quarter of condominium owners would have been ousted if their burned-out building was replaced in frame construction.

The appeal board ruled that a basement must be at least 4½ feet underground. Up to that time local developers had been putting basements a foot or so below ground and using the so-called basement as the first floor of suites or condominiums.

There are several hundred four-storey condominium or apartment buildings in Greater Victoria containing about 20,000 suites.

Some insurance companies were recommending owners and strata councils over-insure their property to cover the cost of concrete replacement.

"We were after a little amendment in the regulations to save a lot of people a lot of worry and trouble," said Jim Pink, secretary-treasurer of the Greater Victoria Strata Corporation Association.

The association represents about 2,000 condominium owners in 60 buildings, most of which had been declared non-conforming. Les Litwin, president of the Greater Victoria Apartment Owners Association, said his members will be relieved.

Loss of a quarter of their revenue property would have affected owners dearly, he said. Most locally are small businessmen.

He said he and his safety officers are not happy because it really means that frame buildings could now have five storeys, with a basement.

Saanich fire chief Harold Gains said his department is equipped to battle fires in four-storey buildings but he wouldn't like to see anything higher.

Machinery Removed From Grain Elevator

Work is under way to remove machinery and equipment from the Ogden Point grain elevator which was closed Dec. 31.

Elevator Manager Chris Usher said Friday it will take another month or six weeks to clear out all the equipment.

He said almost all of the machinery is being sent to Alberta Wheat Pool elevators in Vancouver.

Usher said no decision has been made on whether to demolish the structure.

The elevator, which provided jobs for about 26 people, was closed because of the cost of meeting new fire and safety code standards.

'Super Schools' Opposed

A campaign is being organized by a group of parents to stop a trend in Greater Victoria towards "dehumanizing" education by closing down district schools to form "super schools."

The group was formed following a Greater Victoria School District report proposing closure of Margaret Jenkins School.

"We are not only opposed to the closing of the school, but against adoption of the U.S. system of super-schools," said Karen Whitworth, 459 Stannard.

American super-schools are a failure, she said.

"The policy of establishing these schools has resulted in more drug problems. They have dehumanized education, and created social problems."

She said closing down schools like Margaret Jenkins has an adverse effect on districts.

"People tend to move where the larger school is so that their children don't have to walk too far," she said. "This results in the neighborhood district going downhill. Instead of individual homes you have more apartments and high-rises."

She said all available space at Margaret Jenkins is being used.

"What we would like to see is the elementary school turned into a community school," she said. "We would like to see the school used on weekends by adults and senior citizens."

For the Taxpayer, a Move to Defuse the Minefield

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

For too many citizens, the whole subject of municipal taxation and property assessment is a bewildering jungle of bureaucratic intrigue: a minefield strewn with nasty dollar signs and numbers, but precious little information.

Why is the assessment up from last year? How do the assessors arrive at those figures? How do we appeal?

Then comes the tax notice from the municipal office and — to no one's surprise — taxes are up again. But why so much and who's the villain of the piece? What's a mill rate, anyway?

At least some of this confusion is likely to be removed if the provincial government acts on a number of minor, but sensible, recommendations in the report of the McMath Commission on Property Assessment and Taxation, which was tabled in the legislature this week.

All are designed to make the system more easily understood by the layman, and to ensure that the taxpayer has redress against what he considers unjust treatment.

For instance, the commission wants to see that vague and misleading term "improvements" removed from the assessment notice, and replaced by the phrase "buildings and structures."

Accompanying the assessment notice itself, the commission says, should be an information sheet or brochure containing such basic information as the meaning of a mill and how the mill rate is established; how the assessed value shown has been determined; the relationship of assessment to taxation, with examples; and the grounds on which an appeal may be based.

Similarly, the commission says that tax notices which now present "a bewildering array of cluttered information" should be standardized.

Despite wide differences in the types of levies and service charges between various municipalities, the report says, it should be possible to "design a standard form for use by all municipalities which would make it possible to display information in a manner more clear and simple."

Another recommendation says municipalities should be encouraged to institute a tax billing system which provides for "more frequent payments." The report doesn't say how frequent that should be, but presumably it invisages machinery for at least a quarterly billing system.

On this point, Victoria city comptroller Mason Sheldrick says the city's tax billing could be spread over the year, but it would be difficult and expensive. Even if it was only done quarterly, he notes, costs for forms, envelopes and postage would quadruple.

"We have toyed with the idea in the past but it never came to anything."

Besides, Sheldrick added, any city taxpayer who wishes can pay taxes in monthly instalments or on any other basis. "We accept any sum of money at any time of the year, provided it's not less than $10."

Many personal briefs submitted to the commission's hearings registered strong complaints about present appeals procedures, the report says.

Among other things, there were complaints that "it was difficult and in some cases seemingly impossible to obtain the information necessary to satisfy their inquiries or lodge formal complaints."

To counteract this problem, the McMath commission says before any appeal is lodged the property owner should be able to obtain from the assessor detailed information on how the assessment was arrived at, and the level at which other similar properties are assessed.

One recommendation in the report would, if accepted, provide some welcome tax revenue for the municipality of North Saanich.

The McMath Commission says the provincial government should pay a grant in lieu of taxes on all ferry landings and approaches in the provinces — now defined as highways under the Highway Act and therefore exempt.

North Saanich acting mayor Ald. George Westwood said Friday he was "delighted" to learn this was included in the recommendations, because it would give the municipality much-needed tax reveune from the Swartz Bay ferry terminal.

At present the municipality receives "only a few dollars for fire protection there," he noted.

19 Nations Jockeying for Riches of Antarctica

By JOANNE OMANG
Washington Post

MARAMBIO AIR BASE, Antarctica — Maps of this Argentine science and weather station are full of dotted lines: This will be the new runway, that the recreation centre, this the big hotel. Plans to turn part of the frozen Antarctic into a tourist resort are only one of the ways in which 19 nations are manoeuvring here to establish future access to possible vast resources of oil, minerals and even food.

This ice-covered continent, the size of the 50 United States plus half of Canada, has been internationalized and dedicated exclusively to joint scientific efforts since the 1959 Treaty of Washington. The 12 signatories and seven other countries that later joined agreed to hold claims in abeyanceuntil 19 al and other claims in abeyance until 1991. Until recently, there has been little interest in moving forward the date for a solution.

With pressures rising on known food and energy resources, however, the possibility of riches beneath the millions of years of ice and among the offshore icebergs has led the United States and six of the more industrialized treaty members to call for an immediate opening of the area to exploration by all comers.

Argentina is not among the nations favoring such exploitation. Neither is Chile, whose president, Gen. Augusto Pinochet, recently visited Antarctica to reaffirm his country's claim. The two countries lack the technology to exploit any of the continent's deeply buried possible resources. The other signatories opposed to international exploitation, Australia and the Soviet Union, have huge unexploited areas at home to deal with first.

There was a deadlock on the issue at the treaty signatories' consultative meeting in Paris last year, and it is certain to be central at the next gathering in London in September.

"It's reasonable to presume there are hydrocarbons present," said executive secretary George E. Hemmen of the Scientific Committee for Antarctic Research (SCAR), part of the International Council of Scientific Unions that has called for extensive studies before any decision on exploitation is made.

Fossil and geologic evidence has led other scientists to estimate that the continent may harbor more than 40 billion barrels of oil, a legacy of the days when long-necked plesiosaur dinosaurs roamed the area and sharks swam in its warm waters.

Gold, uranium, copper and coal may also abound, but most of the quantitative estimates that have been made are closely-held secrets.

Japanese, Soviet and West German vessels are already harvesting vast crops of krill, a finger-length crustacean that swims along the Antarctic coasts in schools so dense that loads of 10 to 12 tons have been made in an hour. Once the main food of whales that used to draw seamen generations ago, the little animals are so rich in protein that 10 of them are more nourishing than a half-pound of steak.

German studies, based on sonar and satellite observation, have estimated that 200 million metric tons of krill could be taken annually, or one-third the existing supply, without harming future years' fishing or disturbing the Antarctic waters' food chain. The world's annual total fish catch is now only 70 million metric tons. Krill can be eaten as is, or ground into fishmeal for fertilizer, protein-enrichment powder or meat substitutes.

None of these future possibilities is lost on any of the countries now at work in Antarctica. Seven of them — Norway, Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, France, Argentina and Chile — have territorial claims, many overlapping. The British claim, for instance, includes all of the Argentine claim, which consists of a pie-slice wedge with the point at the South Pole. It is half the size of Argentina. Chile's claim laps over onto the Argentine one, and Pinochet's trip to that area received wide and indignant coverage in the Argentine press.

"We can't say these things yet, because the treaty doesn't expire until 1991, but I know in my heart this is Argentine land," said Marambio base commander Vice-Commodore Arselmo Ramon Aguilera.

All Power to Provinces—Ex-MP

EDMONTON (CP) — Walter Kuhl says that legally Canada has been in a state of anarchy for 45 years.

Mr. Kuhl, a former Alberta MP with a special interest in the constitution, said in an interview that he knows of "no country which is in such shocking constitutional circumstances as Canada."

Mr. Kuhl, 71, of Spruce Grove, Social Credit MP in the former riding of Jasper-Edson from 1935 to 1949, is of the opinion that the Statute of Westminster, passed Dec. 11, 1931, gave all power to govern in Canada to the provinces.

It's a conclusion the soft spoken, articulate former school teacher has been hammering at—in and out of Parliament — for more than 40 years.

He said that in 14 years in the Commons no one ever put forward a reasonable argument to discount his view that "all power legally remains there until such time as the provinces sign an agreement and ratify a constitution whereby they delegate such powers as they desire upon a central government of their own creation."

The retired politician said he has informed every premier of his view—including Rene Levesque of Quebec.

Mr. Kuhl's interest in Canada's constitution started in 1935 with attempts to enact Social Credit principles in Alberta. At the time he met R. Rogers Smith of Vancouver, a member of the Native Sons of Canada, who drafted the resolutions upon which the Statute of Westminster was based. The subject was to become a lifelong interest.

The key point Mr. Kuhl makes is that under the British North America Act, Canada did not become a federal union but a united colony.

The Parliament of Canada, he said, became "merely the central legislature of a united colony." Its only power was that of aiding and advising the Governor-General as agent of the Imperial Parliament.

Quoting statements made by constitutional experts before a special parliamentary committee on the BNA Act in 1935, Mr. Kuhl said that federation never occurred in 1867.

"Colonies can't federate," he said. "They must be sovereign states to do so."

According to his reading of Britain's Interpretation Act of 1889, dominions were defined as "colonies."

"Since the condition of sovereignty and independence must be enjoyed by the provinces before they can federate, it was necessary that the British government relinquish its authority over them," Mr. Kuhl said. Hence the Statute of Westminster.

By section 7, paragraph 2, of that statute, he said, "the provinces of Canada were made sovereign, free and independent in order that they might consummate the federal union they wished to create in 1867."

But since that time the provinces have not acted on that status, have not signed any agreement, have not adopted a constitution and the people of Canada have not ratified a constitution.

"Since Dec. 11, 1931, the Parliament of Canada has governed Canada on assumed power only. It is imperative that this situation be dealt with in a fundamantal way."

Mr. Kuhl suggests that the provinces immediately sign a temporary agreement authorizing Parliament to function as a provisional government.

Then, steps should be taken to organize and elect a constituent assembly whose purpose would be to draft a constitution which must later be agreed to by the provinces and then ratified by the people of Canada.

MILK EQUALIZATION?

SASKATOON (CP) — An NDP member of Parliament is lobbying among his provincial counterparts to have included in Saskatchewan's spring budget "a few hundred thousand dollars" to equalize the consumer price of milk in the province.

Les Benjamin, MP for Regina-Lake Centre, told the founding convention for the redistributed federal constituency of Saskatoon West that transportation costs are the reason a quart of milk sells for 55 cents in Regina and $1.25 in Uranium City.

Farmer Knew His Heifer

EDMONTON (CP) — Dr. Ken Pennifold enjoys telling the story about the worst chunk of beef anyone ever tried to sell in Edmonton during his stint with the city.

"There was one farmer who brought a heifer into a packing plant," said the head of the city's environmental health services. "He wanted to sell it."

"The animal had a bad leg and he said the leg was broken when it was hit by a train.

"But, once I inspected the animal, I found it had blackleg"— a severe condition similar to gangrene.

"So, of course, I asked the farmer how he wanted it cut and wrapped for his own use.

"Naturally, he said he had no intention of eating it himself.

"Then I asked him if it had been a CN or CP train that had hit the animal.

"He said it had been a CN train.

"So I told him he'd better call the engineer and warn him that the cow-catcher on the front of his engine was badly infected with the disease."

The farmer had to pay for the heifer's slaughter and the meat was confiscated.

The story tells much about Dr. Pennifold, a man who gets things done but retains a sense of humor in a job guaranteed not to win him many friends.

One of three children of a city postman, Dr. Pennifold had a somewhat-less-than-illustrious beginning in the working world.

A self-confessed lazy high school student, he took a job after graduation working in a hobby shop as "manager, display man, sales clerk, janitor and you name it" for $10 a week.

He worked briefly as a graveyard-shift radio station announcer and operator but quit because of the $10 weekly salary offered there.

Then came a big break.

"I migrated into the big time, getting a job as a clerk in a plumbing company office at $12.50 a week."

The financial upsurge in his career didn't last long. The Second World War came along and he joined the RCAF.

Once out of the forces he headed back to his old high school to get a transcript of his marks. He had made up his mind that he wanted to be a veterinarian.

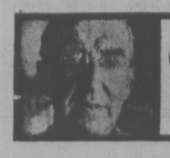
Sandy Soil Can be Difficult, Too



GARDENING
jack beastall

A sandy, or gravally, garden soil can be just as much a problem as a stiff clay soil, although the causes are directly opposed.

The word "sand" in this context does not signify 100% pure sand as found on a beach or purchased from a dealer. When used in connection with garden soils it indicates that sand or stones dominate the mixture just as clay dominates in "clay" soils.

Sands and gravels are early soils. Free drainage allows air to penetrate so that the soil has an average temperature in early spring considerably higher than that of wet clay soil.

Although sandy soils readily permit penetration of heat, air, and water, the holding power of such soils is very low.

The heat gained on a sunny spring day is rapidly lost by radiation as soon as the sun leaves the area. The gases from the air which manage to penetrate between the grains also escape during radiation periods, therefore soil temperature is extremely variable.

Sinking by gravity, water leaves only a thin film of sand which quickly evaporates into the air as soil warmth increases.

As water sinks to the lower levels it carries with it plant foods which are in a form soluble in water, the form in which these nutrients are used by plants. If there is a free outlet for the water leading off the property, sandy soils suffer severe leaching, and that is why they classify as poor, or hungry soils.

While workable at almost any time during the winter season, and capable of producing early spring crops, they become arid as soon as the rains diminish and plant growth is difficult to maintain through the rainless summer months.

Many a home gardener longs for a sandy soil when laboring on a sticky clay in May to produce a tilth suitable for sowing a few seeds, while those with a sandy soil envy the gardener with clay when they see the prodigious crops it can support through the dry summer months.

In a recent article on clay soils it was indicated that conditions are improved when reasonable quantities of humus, or organic matter, in the form of composted plant wastes and stable or barn manure, are added to the soil.

The effect of organic matter mixed with clay is to loosen the mass for better penetration of air and water, and improve the texture.

Unlikely as it may seem to home gardeners, this same organic matter will improve a sandy or gravelly soil.

In this case it binds the grains of sand together, filling the tiny spaces and preventing rapid percolation of water, reduces radiation of warmth and the evaporation of moisture.

Further benefits are the acids of decomposition which act on the particles of sand to release minerals, and the increased populations of micro-organisms which release chemicals from the humus for the use of the growing plants.

Large amounts of organic matter are needed to change sand to a sandy loam, most likely a lot more than the average home gardener's budget could withstand at one time, but there is an easier way to make a start.

The first year dig shallow trenches where vegetable seeds are to be planted and fill these with six to eight inches of organic matter, either compost or barn or stable manures. Old manure is suitable for this purpose because we are not looking for a high nutrient content.

Put about three inches of the sandy soil on top of the organic matter and mix thoroughly with a digging fork or a soil tiller.

Drive a stout stake at each end of the prepared trenches to mark their location, and the next year dig the trenches in the spaces left between the rows this year. This will put a small amount of humus over the entire vegetable plot.

If necessary repeat the same method for two more years, or cover the entire surface with six inches of humus and mix it into the top six inches of soil.

By the fifth year there should be the beginning of a good sandy loam, accompanied by the thrill of being able to grow vegetables known to fail in sand and gravelly soils.

If desired, it is now possible to plant this improved area with permanent shrubs and trees, an annual dressing of organic matter maintaining, or improving, the condition of the soil.

When this is done another area is prepared for the vegetables. In this way the entire garden is gradually built up, first by growing vegetables, and later making permanent plantings as the soil becomes suitable.

The change of clay or sand to a good loam for plant growing is not accomplished with one dressing of compost or manure. The number of years involved will depend on the amount of organic material one can afford to buy and distribute each year.

After a reasonable loam has been obtained, sufficient humus must be added annually to replace the amount converted to chemicals and used by the growing plants. If this is not done, the soil will soon revert to its original condition.

Sources having manure for sale are found in the classified columns of local newspapers, and others are identified by signs on farm fences in many parts of the Saanich Peninsula and the Sooke area.

There are also owners of horses who are willing to trade manure for bedding material to those who have a truck for hauling.

Weeds can be obtained from vacant lots for composting, most owners (and adjoining gardeners) being pleased to have them removed.

The most difficult thing is to get started, to plan a long range soil improvement program, and to follow through until the desired improvement is reached. Difficult, but not impossible.

WORK FOR WEEK

Collect seaweed in plastic bags; spread on vegetable plot or on compost heap together with other discarded plant growth.

Put aside the one or two egg cartons and shallow plastic trays needed for small seed sowings; and plastic fruit baskets for hanging plants in house or in garden or for sundeck.

The first pruning is on Cydonia, the flowering quince, or Chaenomeles; remove most of new growth beyond the old wood where the flower buds can now be seen. Leave only enough new wood for covering the space allotted to the plant.

If soil is workable, prepare raised bed, especially if garden is usually still wet by the beginning of May. Often this time of year is the best for early working. Use the highest spot; raise with rough compost on top of existing soil, then layer the top with soil from compost heap. This will gradually warm and be usable much ealier than surrounging soil at the general level.

Continue using the winter vegetables fresh from the ground instead of leaving parsnips, leeks, kale until they spoil.

70 Degrees to Stay

VANCOUVER (CP) — The city will not change the minimum temperature requirements of its lodging house bylaw at the request of the federal government, the community services committee has decided.

The committee received a letter from the office of energy conservation noting that the bylaw required a minimum temperature in all rental accommodation of 70 degrees Fahrenheit during the day and 65 degrees at night.

Enormous energy savings would be realized if the bylaw minimums were lowered to the office's recommended levels of 68 and 63 degrees Fahrenheit respective, the letter said.

City health inspector Dave Morgan said some lodgings are lucky to reach an average temperature of 70 degrees and said older people need a minimum temperature of 75 degrees to remain comfortable.

Committee chairman Ald. Harry Rankin, who called the letter "ludicrous," said most places leak heat out the windows so the minimums must be maintained.

He also said he had sent a personal letter to the federal office, but hadn't brought it to the committee because he didn't want to offend anyone.

DR. MAX EUWE

This beloved figure in international chess was World Champion from 1935 to 1937. Born in Watergrafsmeer, near Amsterdam, in 1901, Euwe was taught to play chess by his mother when he was 4. When he was 10, he entered and won his first tournament and by the time he was 20, he had won the Dutch Championship and had attracted the attention of the chess world by winning second place at Gothenburg in 1920, ahead of Grunfeld and Saemisch, and by drawing a match with Geza Maroczy. His successes were all the more remarkable because he was studying at the university at the same time and could give only a limited amount of time to chess. In 1923, Euwe gained his doctorate in philosophy and took up teaching. His successes in tournaments continued: Bad Kissigen, 1928, third; Hastings, 1930, first, ahead of Capablanca; Bern, 1932, second; Hastings, 1934, first; Zurich, 1924, second.

In 1935, Euwe became the first real amateur to win the world title, beating Dr. Alexander Alekhine after a grueling match which took 67 sessions to play. Euwe sportingly agreed to a return match in 1937, which he lost.

He has written a number of books on chess that have been widely translated.

In 1970 Max Euwe was elected President of the Federation International des Echecs (FIDE) and on his 75th birthday, the Dutch Chess Federation organized the "Euwe Fund" to help develop chess in all countries of the world.

The honor bestowed him is more than well deserved! He is a gentleman, as grand in his personality as he is large in his person—and he is a big man.

Cougars Will Allow Ron to Return

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

Nor will the Western Canada Hockey League nor his coach stop him.

Trafford, the 19-year-old Regina native whose right eye was removed Friday as the result of an injury suffered at Memorial Arena last Tuesday, had told his temmates Thursday that he intends to return.

"When he feels he's ready, we're going to play him," Victoria coach Pat Ginnell said Friday.

He feels Trafford may return within "10 days or two weeks."

The league won't oppose Trafford's return to hockey, president Ed Chynoweth inferred in a telephone interview from Calgary on Friday.

"Naturally, we (the WCHL) would have t o look at the situation before we allow it," said Chynoweth. "First of all, we must be concerned about his welfare. We'll discuss it with his parents, the player and his doctor.

"Offhand and for the moment, I would have to say there is no reason why Ron shouldn't be accorded the same privileges we gave Greg Neeld."

A native of Vancouver, Neeld lost an eye as the result of an injury suffered while playing for Toronto Marlboros of the Ontario Junior League.

The eastern league refused to allow Neeld to play out his final season as a junior, so he returned to the west and caught on with Calgary Centennials. Wearing a protective face shield, Neeld scored 29 goals and 30 assists for Calgary in the 1974-75 season.

"He would be best advised to take up some less injury-prone sport," suggested Dr. Griswick, while admitting that might allow Trafford to return to hockey in "a limited capacity."

Griswick, however, would not recommend Trafford returning to hockey.

Trafford suffered the injury when accidentally clipped by the stick of teammate Lorry Gloeckner as the Cougar defenceman sparred with Grant Morin of Calgary just 11 seconds before the end of Tuesday's game, which Victoria won 7-3.

Gloeckner feld so badly that Ginnell advised him not to talk to anyone about the incident. Ginnell denied Gloeckner intended to retire, as suggested in reports earlier this week.

"For his own peace of mind," said Ginnell, "that would be the worst thing Lorry could do."

Gloeckner, incidentally, refused a Boston Bruins' request to join Columbus of the International League a few weeks ago. Drafted by the National League Bruins, Gloeckner was assigned to a Boston farm club but returned to Victoria as Cougars' lone overage player.

Gloeckner, who plans to return to Boston's camp next fall, was reluctant to leave Cougars when the team is involved in a heated scramble for playoff positions in the Western Division.

In addition, Gloeckner felt he would get "as much exposure playing in the WCHL as he might get in the International League ... if not more."

Giinnell also expects winger Archie Henderson, who aggravated a knee injury a week ago, to dress. Henderson, however, may see only limited action.

Getting back to Trafford, Ginnell said two benefit games might to staged to establish an education trust fund for the injured player.

Plans are to hold one benefit in Regina in connection with the unveiling of a new arena in his home town. Ginnell also "is checking into" the possibility of arranging an exhibition game in Victoria involving the Vancouver Oldtimers, a crowd-pleasing collection of former NHL stars.

Bears Break Up UVic Shoot-Out

By JIM CRERAR
Times Staff

They staged the biggest whoop-up in the two-year history of the McKinnon gym Friday night, but it wasn't quite enough to scare off a gang of quick-drawing straight-shooters from Alberta.

Alberta Golden Bears, leaders of the Canada West University Athletic Association Men's Basketball League, withstood a late rally to edge UVic Vikings 73-71.

The win left the Bears solidly entrenched in first place with an 11-2 record while the Vikings now have an 8-5 mark. The teams meet again tonight at McKinnon at 8:30.

UVic Vikettes had no trouble rolling to their 33rd straight Canada West women's conference win in a two-year span, dumping Alberta Pandas 68-48 behind the scoring of the Godfrey sisters.

Vikettes now have a 13-0 record in league play this season and a six-point lead over the second-place Pandas, whom they play tonight at 6:30 at McKinnon.

A crowd of nearly 1,400, including high school students who got in free and UVic students who competed in a noise-making contest, had the place rocking throughout the Viking-Bears contest.

The cheers were led by Jim (Mother) Hubbard, a regular at Victoria Bates softball and James Bay Athletic Association rugby games. He showed up at the request of the UVic athletic department clad in Viking warrior attire and brandishing a broad-axe.

The noisiest gang turned out to be 25 men from the third floor of the Sir Arthur Currie residence.

There was little to choose statistically between the Bears and Vikings, but if there was a differenct it was Alberta's accurate outside shooting and quick defence.

League scoring leader Doug Baker and guards Brent Patterson and Keith Smith were especially sharp in the second half. Baker ended up with 24 points while Patterson had 16 and Smith 14.

Vikings, who rallied from an 11-point deficit with four minutes to go, were led by Lee Edmondson with 23 points and Robbie Parris with 18. Chris Hebb added 11 and Grant Boland 10. An off-night by Jim Duddridge, who managed only three points, blunted UVic's offensive thrust.

"Tonight was probably one of our best defensive efforts of the year," Alberta coach Gary Smith said. "Victoria's really a tough team. They're well coached and they hang in there."

Viking coach Ken Shields figured his team missed too many easy shots and didn't do well on offensive rebounding. Both teams grabbed eight offensive rebounds. Bears had 32 defensive rebounds to 30 by the Vikings.

Shields feels tonight's game is a must if Vikings are to have any chance of making the playoffs. The top two finishers qualify.

"We simply can't lose or we'll really be behind the eight-ball," he said.

Bears shot 46 per cent from the floor and 83 per cent from the foul line while Vikings were 43 per cent in field-goal accuracy and 69 per cent in foul shooting. Alberta committed 11 turnovers to 13 by the Vikings.

Vikettes and Pandas were locked in a tight game for the first 20 minutes but coach Mike Gallo's girls broke it open by outscoring Alberta 10-0 in the first four minutes of the second half.

"We were only up six at half time and I told the kids all right, we're going to gamble," Gallow said. "I told them we were going into a press — we're either going to get a couple of quick ones or they're going to catch up. We got six points off the press and then we took it off. We figured we could control the game with a 12-point lead."

Gallo was pleased with Vikettes' over-all performance.

"I was thrilled to death with the entire team," he said, "but Ronni Hind and Brenda Smith should be singled out for the way they contained Amanda Holloway."

In other men's games, Calgary defeated Lethbridge 92-73 and UBC downed Saskatchewan 81-68. In women's play, Calgary trimmed Lethbridge 86-60 and Askatchewan drubbed UBC 61-27.

Oak Bay Bows To Runnymede

WINNIPEG — Ontario is the high school basketball capital of Canada.

That was assured here Friday night when two Ontario teams qualified for the finals of the Winnipeg International basketball tournament.

Runnymede Collegiate of Toronto defeated Oak Bay Bays 58-46 while Oakwood Collegiate Barons of Oakville trimmed Westwood Collegiate of Winnipeg 77-42. They meet in the final tonight.

Oakwood earlier this month won the Emerald Tournament in Vancouver while last weekend in Victoria, T. A. Blakelock Tabbies of Toronto defeated Oak Bay 75-60, in the final of the Oak Leaf Classic, giving Ontario teams a clean sweep of this competition.

Ken Kirzinger scored 18 points for Oak Bay in a losing cause and Wayne Andrews added 12. Bohdan Pelech scored 22 points for Runnymede.

Sangara Again Shows Hot Hand

Harbindar Sangara is hot and that's probably why Spectrum is unbeaten in six games in the High School Boys' Basketball League.

For the fifth game, Sangara Friday night hit for more than 20 points, dropping in 25 as Spectrum defeated Dunsmuir Demons 71-60 at Spectrum.

Sangara is averaging 30.6 points a game over the last five and 27.2 on the season.

Dave Shokar scored 16 points and Grant Clark 14 for the winners. Rick Jeffery had 27 points for Dunsmuir.

AUSTRIAN GIRL WINS

MEGEVE, France (AP) — Austria's Monika Kaserer won the giant slalom race of the World Cup ski meet today, finishing two-hundreths of a second ahead of World Cup leader Lise-Marie Morerod.

Austria's Anne-Marie Proell-Moser was third followed by Viki Fleckenstein, 21, of Syracuse, N.Y. Fleckenstein was a little more than half a second behind the winner.

Kaserer, 24, a veteran of the world racing circuit, placed third in Friday's special slalom race and was the only Austrian in the top 11 in that event. The Austrian team came back today by placing five in the first 10.

The start of the race was delayed an hour because of thick fog on the Mont d'Arbois course. When officials gave the go-ahead there still were thick layers of fog in the middle of the course. Snow conditions were excellent.

Kathy Kreiner of Timmins, Ont., finished 19th in 1:37.96 while Susan Clifford of Old Chelsea, Que., who recorded her best World Cup performance Friday when she finished 16th at Saint Gervais, France, was 26th in 1:38.86.

Kaserer's winning time was one minute, 34.87 seconds and she now is sixth in the World Cup point standings with 116 points.

Morerod continues to lead with 213 points, Moser-Proell is second with 189 and Brigitte Totschnig-Habersatter of Austria, who finished 10th in today's slalom, is third with 148 points.

Gotta's Gang Back

CALGARY (CP) — Calgary Stampeders of the Canadian Football League said Friday Jim Spavital and Ardell Wiegandt have been hired as assistant coaches.

Both men said they took the job because it gave them the opportunity to work again with new Stampeder coach Jack Gotta.

Wiegandt, 36, was formerly defensive coach under Gotta for two years with Birmingham of the now-defunct World Football League. Spvital, 50, also worked with Gotta when the two were assistant coaches under Eagle Keyes with the Saskatchewan Roughriders in the 1960's.

MONTE CARLO, Monaco (AP) — Italians Sandro Munari and Silvio Maiga drove a Lancia Stratos to an unprecedented third consecutive victory Friday in the Monte Carlo rally and equalled the record of four victories in the event.

They headed a Fiat group near-sweep of the 45th Monte Carlo rally. Lancias were first and sixth, a Fiat 131 was second and Seats from the Spanish subsidiary placed third, fourth and eighth.

Munari, 36, a Lancia team driver since 1966, was never challenged seriously after he took the lead Monday on the second speed test of the event.

BANGALORE, India (Reuter) — Another modest Indian batting display enabled England to establish control of the fourth cricket test Friday.

The pitch offered the bowlers little assistance after the sun dried up the early morning dew. But after Anshuman Gaekwad and Surinder Amarnath had added 93 in two hours for the second wicket, India slumped to 205 for six at the close of the first day.

India's Captain Bishen Bedi won the toss and he hesitated before electing to bat. When John Lever removed Sunil Gabaskar with his third ball, Bedi must have feared he had made the wrong decision, but as the sun came out Gaekwad and Amarnath, who made the top score of 63, were able to repair the damage.

The Indian slump after lunch was almost entirely due to indifferent batting, though Brijesh Patel was unfortunate to fall to a brilliant catch by Derek Randall at cover. Randall took Patel's full blooded square cut at a short ball from fast bowler Bob Willis.

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — Julius Boros mixed six bridies with three bogeys Friday for a three-under-par 69 and a 140 total for the lead after the second round in the 72-hole $50,000 PGA seniors championships.

The 1971 seniors winner and two-time U.S. Open champion from Miami held a one-shot lead over Fred Haas Jr, of Metairie, La., a 1966 winner.

Sam Snead of Hot Springs, Va., who has won the tournament six times, was three shots away at 144 after his second even-par 72.

He shared third place with Kyle Burton, retired pro from the Olympic Club of San Francisco, and Al Balding of Toronto.

LYNSONVILLE, Vt. (AP) — The Candian team of twins Shirley and Sharon Firth of Inuvik, N.W.T., and Joan Groothuysen of Bonneyville, Alta., won the women's 15-kilometre relay Thursday at the United States National cross-country ski championship.

Dale Now Plays for Pay

The professional world of golf has claimed another Victoria shotmaker.

Dale Shaw, a five-time city champion and Canada's outstanding female golfer of the year in 1975, has succumbed to the lure of the gold trail.

Fifty-three golfers are included in the field and it is expected that about 10 tour spots will be available on the Ladies Professional Golf Association list.

The decision as to the exact number of tour positions will be made at the 36-hole mark and will depend on scoring.

Shaw has been training in Florida for the past three months.

The tournament will be played on the Bent Tree Golf and Racquet Club course and was switched to Sarasota from North Myrtle Beach, South Carolina, because of the cold wave that has hit the south-eastern part of the U.S.

If Shaw does not earn an LPGA invitation, she can play in a Group-Four mini tour competition and apply again in June.

Victoria's Cec Ferguson, who last sumer won the B.C. Men's Open title, turned professional last fall and has been playing in minor professional tours in Arizona the last two months. He missed out on his first chance to get a Professional Golfers' Association tour card.

Turnabout In Regina

Times News Services

Once the coldest club in the Western Canada Hockey League, Regina Pats are running hot now.

After going 36 games without a victory, the Pats now are undefeated in four. Still mired deep in the Eastern Division cellar, Regina edged Winnipeg Monarchs 4-3 Friday with the help of two breakaway goals by Dirk Graham.

In other games Friday, New Westminster Bruins belted Lethbridge Broncos 9-4 behind the three-goal performances of Brad Maxwell and Mark Lofthouse; Flin Flon Bombers finished the game with only seven players but still were able to upset Brandon Wheat Kings 5-4; Saskatoon Blades dumped the visiting Portland Winter Hawks 5-1, and Medicine Hat Tigers tied Calgary 5-5.

The idle Victoria Cougars were most appreciative of Saskatoon's help. The result kept Portland, loser of six of its past seven games, three points behind the third-place Cougars in the Western Division.

More important, Cougars, who meet Lethbridge in Memorial Arena tonight, now have two games in hand over Portland and second-place Kamloops Chiefs.

The game in Flin Flon was marred by two brawls — the first at 4:28 of the first period and the second at 11:43 of the third.

Teams were assessed 10 minors, seven majors and 13 game misconducts.

Rockies Starting To Think Playoffs

By The Canadian Press

Colorado goalie Michel Plasse is thinking playoffs after the Rockies gained a 3-3 tie with Atlanta Flames Friday to move into a third-place tie in the National Hockey League Smythe Division.

Plasse stopped 44 of 47 Atlanta shots on goal as Colorado improved its record to 13-28-9 for 35 points and a tie for third place with Minnesota North Stars. Vancouver Canucks are in last place only two points behind in the tight battle.

"We're surprising a lot of people lately," said Plasse after the NHL's only game Friday night. "We've been working hard all year and we're thinking about the playoffs now."

In World Hockey Association games Friday, Quebec Nordique beat Indianapolis Racers 6-5, Houston Aeros defeated Edmonton Oilers 4-1 and New England Whalers beat Phoenix Roadrunners 6-2.

"We're going home now for four games and they could make the difference for us," said Plasse after the successful road trip which included a 6-4 win over Boston Bruins Thursday night.

"We are putting it together now and the players are starting to believe they can do it," said Rockies coach Johnny Wilson.

Atlanta peppered Plasse with 21 shots in the second period and 12 in the final period to no avail. Colorado, after 10 shots in the opening period against Atlanta's Phil Myre, had only 11 shots in the final two periods.

'Let It Ride' Says Watson Of Hot Streak

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Tom Watson has played his last 10 rounds a whopping 32 strokes below par. And he isn't about to let the streak end now.

"I'm going to keep on going until it burns itself out," Watson said Friday after his domination of the par five holes had staked him to a five-under-par 67 and a tie for the lead after two rounds of the $180,000 Andy Williams-San Diego Open golf tournament.

As an indication of how well he's playing, he's 11 under par for two rounds at 133, and is only seven below the standard on putts.

Sharing the lead were Australian Bob Shearer, 28, a frequent winner in Australia and Europe but a rookie on the American tour, and longshot Lon Hinkle, 27. Shearer had a second-round 66. Hinkle matched Watson's 67 as the pros took advantage of the ideal playing conditions to post unusually low scores.

Bill Rogers was alone at 135 after a 68. At 136 were Miller Barber, Larry Ziegler, Rod Funseth, Tom Kite, Rod Curl, South African Bobby Cole and rookie Bill Kratzert.

Arnold Palmer failed to qualify for the final two rounds for the second time in as many weeks. Bothered by a bad hand, he had a 71 and a 145 total.

Old Ways Sometimes Best

Twentieth century technology, especially in the field of electronics, has drastically changed life for many of us, vastly improving some aspects. But Bud Knapp, Montreal-based actor, here to play an important role in Bastion's Richard III, does not view certain electronic advances as a totally unmixed blessing.

Of course radio and television have brought dramatic entertainment to hundreds of thousands of persons who otherwise might have had scant experience of it. Knapp was a member of that illustrious group of actors and writers under director Andrew Allan who made the CBC Sunday night radio stage series compulsive listening and by far the best weekly drama hour available on any network.

"Most of it was done live into the mikes," Knapp recalls. "There is no doubt that when taping shows became the practice something was gained in the way of cutting down on nervous strain for the actors and that the shows were better rehearsed. But something was lost too — there was a diminished intensity when we were no longer alerted to those thousands of ears tuned to our performance.

"On the whole I think taping shows has had a negative effect on the excellence of radio drama."

Why does he think CBC has never been able to come up with the sort of quality on television they achieved with the Stage series, I asked him. Knapp thinks that in isolated instances they may have done, though not on a sustained basis. He mentions Zoe Caldwell's Sarah Bernhardt as an example; I offer the Lucy Maud Montgomery documentary, and he agrees.

★ ★ ★

He also feels that the circumstances that made the Stage series possible happen rarely.

"We had excellent writers with a feeling for the medium, some top quality actors and the genius of Andrew Allan. The result was a combination of vision and daring with artistic integrity that was as exciting to us as it was to our audiences."

The size of those audiences on both sides of the border would have delighted our present ratings-conscious era.

Since that time Knapp has kept busy in all theatrical media. From a financial viewpoint TV, radio and film are best but stage roles come to him often and these provide the most satisfaction, he says, again because of immediacy — the sense of instant and close response between actors and audience.

★ ★ ★

Before coming to Victoria he was on stage in Winnipeg, Calgary and Edmonton. He left Montreal for his first visit to this city in a snowstorm that had already delayed his departure some hours.

"What's that?" he demanded when he saw the green stuff spread around at Pat Bay Airport.

"I thought it was Astro Turf," he says with just a suspicion of a wink.

He's enthusiastic about Bastion Theatre's choice of Richard III in which he plays the pivotal role of Lord Stanley. "It's a damn good melodrama filled with action," he says. Knapp has done "masses of Shakespeare" on radio, a little on TV, but none before on stage.

"When Michael Langham was artistic director at Stratford he invited me to join the company," Knapp says. "But you know I've always tried to take the summer off. It seems to me to be a time for getting oneself together — a time for refreshment. So I didn't go."

The attitude is expressive of Knapp's relaxed personality, his easy charm, the quiet humor with which he surveys life in general. He doesn't expect ever to reach a cut-off date when he will part company from the theatre completely.

★ ★ ★

"Actors never retire," he says. But he feels they can lengthen and loosen the ties. What he has seen in Victoria has moved him to the possibility of living in Canada's Eden of the West.

"I'd have a small house, some garden, a chicken and a goat — that sort of thing." And, of course, some theatre here and there. And bird-watching which is one of his enthusiasms. Victoria's thriving sea and shore bird life is a strong part of its attraction for him.

His principal hurdle would be to convince wife, Pat, who teaches acting skills based on creative drama, that life here would be good. She'll be here to see for herself before the run of Richard (Feb. 4-12) is over.

Getting into theatre was an accident that befell Bud Knapp at the age of 19. He was working at Eaton's in Toronto when a friend asked him if he would like to be in a play.

Why not, said Knapp. Fateful words. The inoculation took full force. He credits time spent with a company that played summer and winter stock for teaching him his craft. He spent two years in theatre in Los Angeles.

"I did well, but I didn't like it; I couldn't stand the place," he says. "After that I was in England which I found very satisfying professionally but I had to have Canada; that was where I belonged so I came back and have done very well here ever since, keeping pace with the rapid growth of professional regional theatre that has gone on all over the land."

Recital At UVic

The splendid duo for solo violin and cello by the great Hungarian composer, Zoltan Kodaly, will be a highlight of a recital program by gifted University of Victoria cellist Linda Houghland-Daniels, Friday at 8 p.m. at MacLaurin auditorium.

Ms. Hougland-Daniels will be partnered in the work by international concert violinist Paul Kling, who this year is a visiting professor heading the UVic music department's string division.

Tartini's Variations on a Theme by Corelli, Weber's Adagio and Rondo and the Chopin cello sonata in which Ms. Hougland-Daniels will be assisted by pianist Jenny Regehr, complete the program.

The cellist, who studied in Germany under a Fulbright Scholarship, has been principal cellist with the National Ballet and Dance Theatre of the Netherlands and a member of the Netherlands Chamber Orchestra.

She has appeared as soloist with several orchestras and given numerous recitals in the United States and Europe. At present she is on the faculty of the UVic music department.

On Feb. 9 and 16, Edward Norman, organist of St. John's, will give recitals devoted to the music of J. S. Bach. These recitals will also commence at 8 p.m. and admission for each of the three is by program, available at the door at $2.

Revived Belfry Humming Again

Saved from demise by the last-minute award of a LIP grant, The Belfry launches its 1977 program with a surge of activity and a comprehensiveness that endorses the confidence of the many Victorians who rallied to its cause when the LIP grant was first denied.

Belfry directors Don Shipley and Pat Armstrong initiate the busy schedule next week with two performances by the Mountain Dance Theatre, a fresh young troupe of dancers from Vancouver.

On Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. the ensemble will perform slightly different programs, principal works being Concerto Grosso to music by Vivaldi, Cliche Rondo, a set of improvisations, and a work entitled Port Authority.

The company was formed in 1973 and the objective of co-artistic directors Mauryn Allan and Fredi Long was to build an ensemble able to choreograph and perform its own works. Their choreography seeks in part to be an exploration of their physical environment in dance and movement terms.

Their work has been warmly received by major mainland critics. This will be their first visit to Victoria.

Following closely on the Mountain Dance Theatre, on Sunday Feb. 6 at 8 p.m., Belfry will be host to a distinguished classical guitarist, Alice Artzt. This artist who has drawn glowing headlines in the press of New York and London, has received the supreme accolade of having works dedicated to her by several international composers, including Duarte of England, Santorsola of Uruguay and Gilardino of Italy.

Ms Artzt reveals a range of styles from renaissance and baroque lute music to contemporary composition. Her Belfry program includes works by Dowland, Scarlatti, J. S. Bach, Eastwood, Sor and Castelnuovo-Tedesco.

On Feb. 7 more listening pleasure will be provided in an evening of music by a young, dynamic American string group, the Kronos Quartet. This concert is presented with the assistance of the Leon and Thea Koerner Foundation.

The Kronos Quartet was formed in 1973 and has concertized throughout the United States and Canada, appearing also at numerous festivals. This season the ensemble will make its New York Carnegie Hall debut. Since 1975 they have been resident string quartet at New York State University.

In addition, however, to bringing to The Belfry so versatile an array of high quality arts and entertainment features, the directors feel that Belfry should play a creative part in the community.

With this in mind, casting has just been completed for the first production to originate with directors Shipley and Armstrong.

The Irving Berlin musical — Puttin' On the Ritz includes in its line-up three well known and accomplished Victorians: Bill Hosie, Dan Costain and actress-dancer Sheila McCarthy, as well as Canadian actress Mary Swinton, last seen in Bastion's Stitch in Time.

Bastion has also achieved a double coup in securing the services of a fine North American musical director, Joan Beckow, and as choreographer, Judith Marcuse, winner of the 1976 Chalmers Award for choreography. The set will be designed by Vancouver's Ken MacDonald.

Tickets for all the events of the coming week will be available at the door or enquiries may be made by phone, 385-6815.

Adorable Is Just Not Her Style

A Movie Review By Nora Hutchison

Barbra Streisand has so much talent that her new movie about the making of a star ought to glitter with excitement, but A Star Is Born is so flaccid and slow that most of her audience will remember it as A Star Is Boring.

The movie's focus is entirely on a marshmallow-sweet character (Streisand as she wishes she was?) whose rise to stardom seems to be predicated entirely upon her good-natured sass, her hugable charm and her Harpo Marx haircut. Everybody knows that stars are not born, they're made — from guts, hard-work, and a strong instinct for survival at any cost — but Streisand, apparently, doesn't like to remember the dirty-work and, understandably, she would prefer not to remind her audiences.

★ ★ ★

Streisand's movie (and it is hers; she's listed in the credits as Executive Producer), is the third version of an early talkie plot, What Price Hollywood (1932), directed by George Cukor, in which a celebrated director marries an up-and-coming young actress, makes her a star, and then, unable to cope either with her success or his dependency on booze, kills himself.

Janet Gaynor in 1937, and Judy Garland in 1954, played the heroine, Esther Blodgett, the true-blue, show-must-go-on performer who never wanted to cause anyone any trouble. In those plots, Esther was willing to give up her career to save her husband, and the scripts emphasized her loyalty and devotion to the man who claimed her energy.

In Streisand's version, the hero is an aging rock-star — doped up, boozed-out, and on his way down in the estimation of his fickle fans. The heroine, renamed Esther Hoffman, is a young singer with her feet on the ground and a driving voice, full of the energy and excitement that he wishes he still had. And although Esther is not willing to give up her career, she falls easily into the mold of the loving help-mate who pretends that being a superatar is nothing at all.

If Streisand had played her character as a tough, wired-up performer who saw an opportunity to attach herself to the rock star, and who love him and used him at the same time, the movie would have had something to it. We need to see her using his career to further hers, and then softening the blows she deals him with love and games. It's a route that more than a few aspiring stars have taken, and the inherent drama in that it's full of tension.

But the love these two express for each other is pure and selfless. They're above manipulating the other; their quarrels have no weight or substance — they're just an opportunity for Streisand to twist her Harpo grin into a clown's grimace.

★ ★ ★

The movie looks a good deal like the carefully posed interview. Streisand and her lover and producer-hairdresser Jon Peters did with Barbara Walters on ABC television last December. Watching that, we were made to feel like lucky gawkers as Jon and Barbra led the cameras past Barbra's vegetable patch, through their ranch house with its expensive assemblage of art deco and country-cottage furnishings, and into their bedroom where they cozily curled up for the final moments of the interview.

We're the ones who are being used in this case and we're paying an awful lot for the privilege of watching something that's as phoney as a gossip magazine layout.

Streisand grabs for our attention but she can't hold it because her character is so vacuous. But as John Norman Howard, the rock star, Kris Kristofferson has it all the time. He's the star that's born in this picture but there's never quite enough of him — Streisand always has first dibs on the camera.

★ ★ ★

Kristofferson's character burns with self-hatred — he's angry about what he's become, he has nothing but contempt for his audience, and he's sick of what he's doing, but he's lost sight of a reason for doing anything else. The craziness of the life on the road has got to him; down-to-earth Esther is all he has to cling to. Kristofferson sings with a rough, almost gravelly voice that you can barely hear above the music.

His body is fit but his beard is grizzly grey, and there's no shine left in his eyes. John Howard Norman is burning out, and he knows it. It's a powerful role and Kristofferson does what he can, but the movie is Streisand's and she doesn't let us forget it.

This is her first production effort and she's involved herself in too many different problems, too soon. Not only is she Executive Producer (in this case, a kind of overseer, managerial role) but she's also been given the credit for the "musical Concepts," whatever that means. The score, by Paul Williams, Streisand, and Leon Russell, among others, is that slow, syrupy, crying-in-your-milkshake kind of music that does nothing for either Streisand's or Kristofferson's style. The plot, too, gives evidence of her tampering. Not only do we see Esther as pal, lover, star, wife, help-mate, and widow, but throughout she's unaffected and unassuming.

Streisand seems to want us to believe that the character she portrays on-screen is her essential self. But why? Streisand is not an adorable creature, although she tries to be — romping in the desert in a Superman T-shirt, or fading ethereally into a sunset. Adorable is just not her style. Surely she knows that we expect superstars to be temperamental, demanding, undependable and even outrageous — it's just what keeps us interested in their performances, and in their fate. What we've admired about Streisand in the past is her strong presence on-screen, her curious, mobile face, her commanding voice. What's really wrong with this movie is that Streisand has assigned herself a character she can't believe in, and she's caught herself up in a lie.

Streisand and Kristofferson

AT THE GALLERIES

Three new exhibitions will open Wednesday evening at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria, 1040 Moss, and will remain on view there through Feb. 27.

SONGS of travel that express scenes and emotions experienced by the traveller will be the theme of a recital by Victoria soprano Adele Lewis at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria Thursday. Homesickness, delight of discovery, castle and river scenes, gypsying, romantic summer nights and simple pastoral pleasures are invoked in songs of Hugo Wolf, Schumann, Delius, Dvorak, Berlioz and Britten. Assisting at the piano will be Grace Timp. Doors open at 7:30 p.m. and the admission is 50 cents to non-members of the gallery.

Today's Calligraphy of Japan is an annual event sponsored by the All-Japan Calligraphy Federation. From a membership of over 300 the works of only 49 masters are currently on display. The works represent three styles; Chinese, Japanese and Avant Garde. Catalogues will be available and the works are for sale.

The second exhibition presents four sculptors who are working in Vancouver and the Gulf Islands. The sculptors are Dean Ellis, Ruth Beer, Roland Brenner and Mowry Baden.

A passenger van will leave the gallery at 2 p.m. on Tuesdays and Sundays during the course of the exhibition, to allow visitors to view a work by Baden in Layritz Park near Wilkinson Road.

A showing of 57 prints, drawings and photographs illustrating engineering projects in North America from the 1850s to 1900, comprises the third exhibition. It is on loan from the National Gallery of Canada.

In addition the Art Gallery has assembled from its permanent collection 43 objects chosen as a representative survey of art for students of History in Art 120 at UVic. All media are demonstrated, from oil painting to furniture, engraving to estampille.

The works have been selected to include famous names and well known works such as Rembrandt, Picasso and Escher. Also on display are pieces by local artists Jack Wise and Pat Martin Bates.

Gallery hours are Tuesday-Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sunday, 2-5 p.m.; Thursday, 7:30-9:30 p.m.

Utley's Art Galleries, 9182 East Saanich, have two shows opening Friday which will continue on view through Feb. 27.

Paintings and collage by Kay Ratcliffe and Bessie Snider reveal quite separate visions and personalities. Ratcliffe demonstrates a deep love of the land and has a wide scope, from delicate flower images to monumental rock.

Snider indulges in symbols of the past; calligraphy, magic inscriptions, reflections on Egypt and Persia, much of it presented with a dash of humor.

At Utley's the hours are Tuesday through Sunday, 11:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

★ ★ ★

Karibu's Upper Gallery at 563 Johnson, is presenting Impressions of Timelessness, an exhibition of watercolors by Victoria artist John Fraser. The artist is concerned with exploring the subtlty of nature's forces in constancy and change.

This exhibition opened today and will remain until Feb. 10 Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily and on Sunday from 2 to 4 p.m.

BASTION TOURS

During the week of Jan. 31 Bastion Theatre will be touring a valuable showcase presentation to Vancouver Island schools as part of its Richard III audience development program. The showcase, directed by Glynis Leyshon, features Bastion Theatre Youth Touring Company members Thomas Braybrook, Miles Cohen, Kathleen Hildebrandt, Robert Weber and Jeremy Young.

The undertaking — a short collage of historical facts, figures and fun — is an attempt to provide students with historical and political background aimed at achieving a fuller understanding of Richard III. It is to be followed in the schools by a general discussion of Shakespeare, the play, and Bastion's production of it.

Participating schools will see Richard at McPherson Playhouse, Thursday at 1 p.m., Feb. 14 at 9:30 a.m. and 2 p.m. and Feb. 15 at 2 p.m.

UVic Theatre Stages 4 Plays

The month of February will see four productions mounted by University of Victoria theatre department at the on-campus Phoenix Theatre.

Short plays, they are programmed in pairs, the first pair being John M. Synge's Riders to the Sea and Canadian playwright Michel Tremblay's Forever Yours, Marie-Lou, running from Thursday through Sunday, Feb. 6.

The directors, all post-graduate students in the M.F.A. program in directing, include two newcomers from Montreal — Clare Brown, who is directing the Irish classic, and Michael Boucher, directing the Tremblay work. Brown and Boucher are both theatre graduates from McGill University.

Joe Orton's "ruffian on the stair," and an original play, Sports, directed by its author, Don Woticky, comprise the second program, which will be seen Feb. 16-19.

Director of the Orton play is Stephen Lloyd. While this is his first directing assignment in Victoria, lloyd is already known to local theatre buffs as the disturbed boy, Alan Strang, in Equus and for the title role in UVic's successful production, Spacino!

Woticky's play is a tragicomedy that looks at the future as represented by four athletes about to enter a sports arena. Last year Woticky directed the production of Gallows Humor and played the role of Argente, the boy's father, in Scapino!

Starting times for both programs are 8 p.m. For ticket reservations and information call the Phoenix box office, 477-4821.

96 Vietnamese Refugees Found

TOKYO (AP) — A Japanese ship rescued 96 Vietnamese refugees it found drifting in a small boast in the western Pacific, the Maritime Safety Agency said Friday.

It said the 1,514-ton car carrier Hosei Maru spotted the refugees Thursday night about 75 miles west of Luzon island in the Philippines. The refugees left Da Nang Jan. 12 aboard their 20-ton boat for the United States via the Philippines, the MSA said.

'West Side' Auditions

Open auditions will be held Feb. 8 at Christ Church Cathedral Memorial Hall at 1 p.m. for a production of the Leonard Bernstein musical West Side Story.

Ron Way Jr. Will direct the show which is scheduled for production some time in June at Cedar Hill Community Centre. Anyone interested in any phase may attend. The cast calls for four males over 30 and 35 mena and girls under 25.

Dancing experience will be appreciated. Those trying out may bring their own music. Pianist Walter Prossnitz will be in attendance and is also to act as rehearsal pianist.

MacRae and Symphony

Munford

The first pair of du Maurier Pops concerts with Victoria Symphony Orchestra this season, takes place Sunday and Monday at the Royal Theatre.

On the podium will be Gordon Munford, conductor and arranger for the last four years for singer Gordon MacRae who is the featured soloist in a full program of Rodgers and Hammerstein hits.

Possessing one of the most mellow and musical baritones in show business and a star in almost every area of the entertainment world, MacRae was a beguiling Curly in the film version of Oklahoma and Rodgers and Hammerstein's personal choice for the creating of the anti-hero role of Billy Bigelow in Carousel.

MacRae will sing songs from Oklahoma, Carousel (including My Boy Bill), South Pacific and Sound of Music. The orchestra will play selections from The King and I and South Pacific and an arrangement of the musical score of Victory at Sea.

DON'T SEE THE JOKE

WINNIPEG — Ukrainian jokes may be funny to some people but the Ukrainian Canadian Committee sees them as defamatory and offensive.

"These jokes are often presented in an unacceptable way which borders on defamation, offending the feelings and self-respect of Ukrainians as well as non-Ukrainian Canadians," S. J. Kalba, executive director of the committee said.

Czech Rockers Facing Trial

VIENNA — Six rock musicians are to be put on trial in Czechoslovakia within the next few days, the human rights organization Amnesty International said Friday.

Seven pop musicians were jailed for up to 18 months in two separate trials last year, on charges of hooliganism and organizing an underground music evening.

The six are Josef Janicek, Milan Hlavsa, Jiri Kabes and Jaroslav Vozniak, of the Plastic People of the Universe rock group, Jaroslav Kukal of the DG 307 group, and solo singer Karel Soukup.

Precise charges brought against them are not known, but the official Czechoslovak news media have described them as "criminals, alcoholics, drug addicts and psychopaths."

Sisters Break in Growing Krishna Row

BOSTON — As youngsters, Susan and Eileen Murphy had their differences, but nothing like this. Now the sisters are on opposite sides of the growing controversy over religious cults.

Susan, a former member of the Krishna Consciousness movement, wants to see some of its leaders in jail. Eileen, still a devotee of the group, is in Toronto, fighting, she says, for her religious freedom.

"They were very normal girls," says their mother, Mary Murphy. "Susan was much more outgoing than Eileen. Eileen was a softer sort of person."

"I found it so different, so completely different," she said. "They seemed to be so happy.

"They said all my education, my culture, the way I ate, the way I slept was all wrong because I wasn't doing it for Krishna."

Five years later, 18-year-old Susan is prepared to testify against two Krishna leaders when they come to trial, in New York City on charges of extortion and brainwashing.

During her first two years in the movement, Susan was moved around the U.S. from coast to coast and from temple to temple.

She was under age and therefore a legal liability to the group. Eventually she came back to Boston and even for a time lived at her Weymouth home while attending the temple.

But when Mrs. Murphy found out the group's plans to send her still under-aged daughter to West Germany, she called police and forbade Susan from reading her Krishna books or going to the temple.

By this time, Eileen, now age 21, was already a full devotee of Krishna.

"I started coming to the temple when my sister invited me to some feasts," Eileen said in a telephone interview from Toronto.

"I got some of the books and studied them. After evaluating the philosophy I decided that that was how I wanted to live.

"I wasn't satisfied with my life," she said. "Like most young people of 18, I had no definite plans. I was going steady with a boy and working in a sporting goods store.

"They (the Krishna devotees) had a purity and a peace of mind I desired to have."

Susan criticized the group for discriminating against its women members.

"The attitude of the men toward the women was so degrading ... The women had to eat old, leftover food. We couldn't talk in the hallways or sing or dance."

Eileen denied this. "Basically our duties are the same," she said. "I have never been subjected to discrimination. There are women who lecture, who make films, who write. Every aspect of Krishna Consciousness is open to women as well as men."

RCA TV Sets Hazardous

MONTREAL (CP) — RCA Ltd. warned Friday that about 12,000 "Instant-on" 22-inch color television sets built and sold in Canada five years ago are a fire hazard.

The company said in a statement that reported cases of fires and subsequent tests have shown that the instant-on switch may become "unreliable" after several years' use, creating a fire hazard.

The faulty switches are found in sets bearing serial numbers with the prefix "CCC" and followed by a three-digit number in the "600" series, for example CCC643.

Owners should shift the instant-on switch on the back of the set to the "Master-on" position and contact a local RCA service agent for a free modification.

Author Defends Roots Violence

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — The author of Roots says the televised version of his best-selling book "might create some incidents here and there," but in general will have a good effect on race relations. "It is rather like opening up an old boil and letting the pus out," said Alex Haley. Roots, which traces Haley's family history and depicts the mistreatment of his ancestors at the hands of white slaveowners, has drawn huge television audiences for each episode. It is being telecast by ABC on eight consecutive nights. The series has prompted strong reactions from many viewers and has been blamed for racial incidents at schools in Harrisburg, Pa., Detroit and Hot Springs, Ark.

Rubinstein

NEW YORK (AP) — Polish-born master pianist Arthur Rubinstein celebrated his 90th birthday Friday, surrounded by his kith and kin, dozens of flowers and a dozen birthday cakes. "Every day is the happiest day of my life," he said in an interview. "Every day is unique. It can never be repeated. "I never met in my whole life anyone who is as happy as I am, and at 90 that is a very big declaration. I'm wildly interested in everything. "For me, everything is eternally different, eternally new — when I play a composition for the 150th time it is new again. Maybe that's what keeps me alive."

SALMON, Idaho — The Salmon Volunteer Fire Department flunked a state safety inspection. There was no fire extinguisher at the station. Fire Chief Frank Barsalou agreed an extinguisher might come in handy if a fire should start at the station while the department's three trucks are out fighting a blaze.

LOS ANGELES — Television star Fredddie Prinze's chances of surviving a bullet he put through his head have improved, a friend says, but the 22-year-old entertainer was still near death. "When they brought him in this morning, they said the chances were one million to one," family friend Paul Waserman said Friday night. "Now they tell us it is one hundred to one." Prinze shot himself in the head early Friday while his business manager was with him. The shooting ended hours of attempts by Prinze's psychiatrist and others to help him relieve his despondency.

LOS ANGELES, Calif. — Burt Mustin, one of Hollywood's oldest and busiest actors, died Friday at the Glendale Manor Hospital in Glendale, a family spokesman said. Mustin would have been 95 on Feb. 8. He did not become an actor until he was 60. His last show was his wedding to Mother Dexter on the Phyllis television show broadcast on Dec. 13 on CBS. He also appeared on the engagement show Dec. 6. Judith Lowry, who played Mother Dexter, died at 86 in New York City on Nov. 29. "This is it," Mustin told friends during the filming. "I've had it. But it's a classy way to go."

NEW YORK — Two taser guns that stun a victim with a 50,000-volt charge have been taken from rock singer Stevie Wonder by police. Acting on a tip by Philadelphia police, New York police officers went to the blind singer's residence here and confiscated the weapons. The tasers, which look like flashlights, fire two darts which are attached to two copper wires that carry an electrical charge and give the victim a 50,000-volt jolt.

COMMERCIAL DELETION

In its July 1971 cable television policy statement the Commission described several methods to reduce the economic impact of the penetration of United States television stations in Canada in order to enhance the capacity of the Canadian broadcasting system to achieve national broadcasting objectives. One of the methods proposed was the removal of commercials from incoming U.S. television signals, known as commercial deletion.

Random commercial deletion was implemented and continues to be practised at present in Calgary, Edmonton, and some parts of Toronto. In addition, the Commission has made it a condition of a number of cable television licences in various parts of Canada that plans for commercial deletion be developed by cable television licensees in conjunction with television broadcasters for the further implementation of commercial deletion, and that the Commission be informed of the development of such plans by specified dates.

On October 18, 1976, the Commission informed the appropriate cable television licensees that the dates on which the required reports on plans for commercial deletion were to be submitted had been extended to August 31, 1977.

The Commission has now been informed by the Minister of Communications, the Honourable Jeanne Sauve, that the Government fully supports the objectives which have led the CRTC to institute the commercial deletion policy, but considers that the feasibility of other methods of achieving the same objectives should be examined by the Commission before commercial deletion is further implemented. In addition, the Government considers that time should be allowed for an assessment of the effects of Section 19.1 of the Income Tax Act and of simultaneous program substitution.

The commission welcomes this indication of Government support for the objectives of its regulatory policies. The Commission will undertake the requested examination and assessment. This period of assessment will also enable the Commission to receive the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada on the Commission's jurisdiction with respect to commercial deletion which continues to be authorized for implementation by several cable television licensees as a condition of their licences.

By MARGUERITE SULLIVAN

CAIRO — When in Egypt travel as the Egyptians do: by train, taxi, boat, even horse-drawn carriage and donkey.

As a tourist, you probably won't spend all your time in Cairo, but will at least go to the ancient cities of the pharaohs — Luxor and Karnak, about 420 miles by train from Cairo.

Getting there by train can be as adventurous and interesting as discovering the two, and going by train is cheap. One-way plane fare between the two is $235. But first-class overnight train fare — which means a compartment entirely to yourself — is just under $10.

Second-class fare — which means the same accommodations, only with two to a compartment — is less than $6 each. There also is a third class but it can be grim for the more luxury-prone westerner.

The train leaves nightly at dusk from the huge main station in Cairo and gets in about 5:30 a.m. in Luxor. It leaves Luxor at 9 nightly and arrives in Cairo about 6:30 a.m.

You should buy your ticket a few days in advance. Be sure to ask for a compartment assignment to avoid a scramble at the station.

When you go to your first- or second-class cabin, you will find it clean, with sheets and blankets (often the bed already is made up), air conditioning, lights (both overhead and reading), luggage racks, a sink, good door locks and conditions almost like home.

There are drawbacks.

Each train car has bathrooms, which by U.S. standards are not the cleanest. The ride can be bumpy — as you lurch and bump, you are reminded that Egypt was built on sand and the train tracks are no exception. The porter is sure to knock on your door and demand his "backshish," meaning "a little tip," just for being around. It is a maddening Arab custom, but one you can ignore.

Still the train has its advantages. Travelling by night, you save twice on hotels. And with the early morning and evening light, you will see enough of the rural countryside to compensate for the long and tedious day train journey.

As the train rolls along the Nile, the views you get are fascinating.

Clay hut villages perch at the edge of the fabled river. Women dressed in black squat by its shores washing clothes. Small boys tug an unwilling camel from a wheat field toward their village. A father and son ride a donkey along the Nile.

Travelling Egyptian doesn't stop with the train. In Luxor and Krnak, you can journey as Egyptians have since the pharaohs — by donkey and horse-drawn carriage.

While you'll want to spend time (preferably a day) at the temples in Luxor and Karnak, you also will want to cross the Nile where you will find on the other side of the river the funeral temples of Rameseum, Deir el-Bahri, Medinet Habu and Seti; the spectacular underground royal tombs in the Valley of the Kings and the Valley of the Queens, the Tombs of the Nobels and the Colossi of Memnon.

If you have only one day to spend on both sides of the river, the only way to travel is by taxi. It can whisk you from ruin to ruin. But the advantage of travelling by donkey is that the journey is more leisurely, you can thoroughly investigate what ruins you wish and get a good view of Egyptian countryside and life.

At the end of the day, you again will cross the river by ferry. On the Luxor-Karnak side of the river, you will travel between the two towns the way the pharaohs probably did millenniums ago — via carriage.

They are everywhere. Price for two people between Luxor and Karnak is about $1, and you can bargain on that. As you clomp down the ancient, sphinx-lined road which spreads along the Nile between the smaller Luxor temple and the larger Karnak one, you imagine making the same journey 3,000 years ago.

The drivers are amenable to making frequent stops for pictures, and the carriages are a pleasant diversion from transportation in Cairo.

There you often would rather walk. Taxis are cheap, only a few pennies every few kilometers; what is not dear to their drivers is going slow. The problem is that the meter charges by the kilometer, not by the minute, making taxi drivers race to their destinations.

Yet, cabs are the only way to travel, unless you are brave — and thin — enough to try Cairo buses. They always are loaded.

Tracking the pharaohs – by carriage

150 ships to sail

LONDON — About 150 vessels, from aircraft carriers to lifeboats, will take part in the Queen's silver jubilee review at Spithead on June 28.

This spectacle, one of many events in 1977 marking the 25th anniversary of the queen's accession to the throne, will be held on the stretch of water between Portsmouth and the Isle of Wight. As well as 90 British warships and civilian-manned auxiliaries, Commonwealth, NATO, CENTO and EEC nations have been invited to send warships to the review.

There will also be ships representing the merchant navy, the Royal National Lifeboat Institution, Trinity House and the coastguard. Portsmouth, for centuries a main base of the Royal Navy, is 71 miles southwest of London. It is also the home of Nelson's flagship, HMS Victory.

Climbing the Sierra to find snow

By STAN DELAPLANE

Travel Tips

In the night I heard the first pat-pat on the roof. It was cold as billy-o but I went out to feel the first rain after 46 of the driest days ever seen in California winter.

At this time of year you should be able to w r i n g water out of the ground. The high Sierra is usually under three feet of snow.

Instead we've had a small dust bowl. And the million-dollar ski resorts were empty.

Down the little street of Coloma (population 100 maybe), a few lights were coming on. Here on the gravel banks of the American River, James Marshall found the first nuggets that set off the great gold rush.

It was January, 1848. Marshall and some Mormon helpers were building a sawmill for John Sutter down in Sacramento.

Marshall w a l k e d to the tailrace one morning to see if the water runoff could be improved. And there it was!

□

In the morning it was still raining. I bought snow chains in Placerville — it was once Hangtown, but the miners' name was too juicy for later chambers of commerce.

For a week we've been poking around in ghost towns that once were rip-roaring mining camps. Whiskey Slide and Murderer's Gulch, You Bet and Bedbug.

I've been betting on the first snow. Being in the Mother Lode put me a couple of hundred miles closer than the snow bunnies booming out of San Francisco and its suburban bedroom cities.

We climbed on Highway 50 and picked up the first snow flurries at 4,000 feet.

The highway follows the south fork of the American. It climbs to 6,000 at Lake Tahoe. Then it drops down into the Washoe Valley and Carson City in Nevada.

In the 1860s, the great Comstock Lode was pouring silver and enormous bank credit into San Francisco.

Mrs. Sandy Bowers quit taking in miners' w e ing at S t e a m b o a t Springs. For Sandy was now a millionaire too. She began building a mansion and prepared for a grand tour of Europe.

"Snowshoe" Thompson had a pair of long boards sawed out. Strapped them to his feet and skied along this same route. He carried letters between Hangtown and Virginia City for a dollar an envelope.

□

At 5,000 feet there was enough snow to put the chains on. We drove on through great, dark-green Jeffrey pines, the chains making a muffled clickety-click in the new snow.

There's a hushed feeling about the first snow.

The Sierra is overpowering country. The road climbs to 7,000 feet over Echo Summit and below, a thousand feet or more, are grey canyons of granite.

□

At the Nevada edge of Lake Tahoe, the road levels off. You drive through wall-to-wall motels. They all had cheery neon vacancy signs on.

And in the middle of the town, the great gambling clubs and plush gambling hotels had all their lighted glittering promise turned up: "more jackpots t h a n any place in Nevada!"

Travelling with kids needn't be harrowing

By BETTY PEACH

The four-year-old raced happily up and down the aisle of the plane on its non-stop flight. With his quick changes from cowboy to rustler to lawman, he kept up a rapid, noisy gunfire from pointed fingers.

The weary passenger beside me caught the lad's arm and suggested firmly: "Go outside and play."

The boy's mother ignored the polite protestations of passengers. She ignored the boy, too.

It is possible to travel with children, retain one's sanity, and not drive the other passengers up the wall. But it takes some advance planning, some preparation and training for the children, and a firm hand en route.

Travelling in the family automobile is easier on everyone.

Give each child a zipper case in which he may take games and books of his choice, plus a toothbrush and one fresh shirt. One family that makes a 1,500-mile trip to visit grandparents each year, has a small padded table that slips into the back seat. The two children sit on either side and use it for working puzzles and playing games.

The family plans the trip in advance, with stops scheduled every two hours at parks or points of historical interest.

The children have a map of the route and know in advance what to expect. They all play catch a few minutes to let the children run and work off steam.

Each child has his own luggage and some freedom of choice in what he takes. The mother insists on wash-wear fabrics, and in multicolored prints wherever possible. Fewer spills of mustard, grape jelly and catsup will show, she reasons. Every few days they stop at a coin-operated laundry.

Regardless of how the family travels, health rules are the same. Be sure children are in good health when the trip begins. Take adequate supplies of any medication taken regularly.

The informality at the destination and the means of transportation dictate the wardrobe for children as well as adults. A young mother of two small daughters who are excellent swimmers takes two swimsuits, a cap, a pair of shorts and a shirt, one dress and a change of underwear per child. It is all they ever need at any beach resort.

"I believe children will live up to what is expected of them when they are on vacation," says one young mother. "Sometimes my children are hellions at home, but they know how to behave when travelling."

The other Quebec: Warm-hearted carnival

QUEBEC CITY — Nowhere in North America are cold weather and piles of snow more welcome than in this French-Canadian city, now in the final planning stages for its 23rd Winter Carnival (Feb. 3-13).

Quebec really is old man winter's utopia. For here this blustery fellow can hurl his frosty breath across the countryside at will; he can freeze rivers and lakes and dump a full skyload of snow over the landscape week after week — and receive praises for his efforts.

This year, as always, people here are hoping he will do his best. For more than two million visitors are expected to be on hand this year to join Quebec residents in taking an active part in the hundreds of snow-oriented festivities scheduled, including international contests, balls, tournaments, and parades.

The minute I arrived for my first Quebec Winter Carnival I was caught up in the swirl of excitement.

There were singing and dancing in the streets, happy, spontaneous laughter, and a host of wholesome activities that included skating to music, swooping down ski slopes, and hauling a toboggan to the top of the quarter-mile, three-chute run at the Chateau Frontenac for a thrilling race to the bottom.

Every imaginable out-of-door activity, as well as a score of indoor events, is scheduled by the program commitee of the Carnaval de Quebec.

There are skiing events at nearby Lac Beauport, professional hockey games, barrel races, parades, street dancing, a Grand Regency Ball, the international pee-wee hockey tournament with teams competing from all over Canada and from eastern sections of the United States, and the ice canoe race across the ice floes of the St. Lawrence River between Quebec and Levis.

What has struck me especially at the carnival is the fact that whole families participate in the activities together.

On the toboggan slide on the St. Lawrence side of the Chateau Frontenac, for example, children and parents spend hours together enjoying this exhilarating sport, at times reaching speeds of 45 m.p.h. The chutes are safe and carefully tended by experts.

One of the more exciting events for me was watching the grand parade. Cold? Of course not. Proper clothing plus stamping my feet, along with the thousands of others in attendance, to keep time to the peppy music played by a number of high school bands kept the chills away.

The ice canoe race, across the fast-moving ice floes of the St. Lawrence, is fascinating. This year it has been scheduled for Sunday afternoon, Feb. 13, at 2:30.

The hardy racers start out in clear, open water, soon to find themselves smack on a plateau of ice 13 inches thick. With the agility of cats they spring from their canoes onto the ice and slide their craft to the next open patch of water. It takes great strength and perseverance to make the round trip — as well as the ability to stand the cold water when the ice suddenly gives way.

Nowhere else, I was told, is there such a exhibition of boating. The men who compete live on islands where the only means of getting mail and food in the winter is by crossing the ice-filled St. Lawrence.

Among the many other events worth attending are the night parade at 7 o'clock, Feb. 5, leaving the Hippodrome de Quebec (the stands for spectators are heated); public gathering and dancing, Place Carnaval, Monday, Feb. 7; the torchlight descent, Relais ski centre, Lac Beaufort, 8:30 p.m., Wednesday, Feb. 9; the International Pee-Wee Hockey Tournament, Quebec Colisuem, Thursday, Feb. 10, 8:30 a.m. to 9 p.m.; and the night parade on Feb. 12, leaving Laval University at 8 o'clock, along the route of St. Cyrille, Dufferin, Grande-Allee, and manege militaire (drill hall).

The theme song of the annual Carnaval de Quebec is a catchy tune. Locals and visitors alike can be heard humming or whistling the melody as they walk along the streets, reflecting the gaiety of this great annual event.

Ottawa offers craft bonanza

OTTAWA — Eskimo legend says soapstone turtles bring good luck.

If you're superstitious, you can probably buy one in any of a number of craft shops in downtown Ottawa.

Pioneer handicrafts are highlighted at Canada's Four Corners on Sparks Street. The main floor of this Canadiana store contains everything from homemade candles to pine chairs.

Indian and Inuit handicrafts are in a niche all their own and customers can take their time looking over moccasins, totem poles, and sculpture.

Upstairs you will find a room full of pine furniture, including an old school desk. Adjacent to this is Gallery 93, which features the work of Canadian artists.

A slight detour into the Promenade, an indoor mall on Sparks Street, will lead you to La Petite Maison, where you will be drawn to an intriguing display of small wooden replicas of sailors and Scots whittled by a Spencerville, Ont. craftsman.

Further west you'll find Place de Ville, an underground shopping mall. Tucked away among the boutiques is L'Artisan Canadien Handcrafts.

The tiny shop has a wide selection of the work of Canadian artisans. Of particular interest are the sculptures by Allan Ryan. He has constructed stick men out of metal wire and copper, in a variety of poses ranging from a hobo on a bench to a sports car driver with his scarf blowing in the wind.

Apple head dolls are popular and L'Artisan Canadien offers several. Each doll has its own name and seems to have its own personality.

Don't let high prices deter you from at least browsing through l'Artifex d'Artistes on Bank Street. Here you will find all kinds of delightful handicrafts.

The back wall is decorated with a three dimensional wooden wall hanging of a miniature pioneer village constructed from pebbles, wood chips, and small planks. For something a little smaller, but also unique, there is a set of carved wooden boots (complete with laces), designed to serve as candle holders.

Take a step back in time and visit the Bowl and Board on Bank Street. Everything in the store is made of wood, right down to the mustard cup and spoon.

Enterprising children will enjoy the wooden jig-saw puzzles shaped like animals. Older people might be more interested in the carved beer mugs and wine glasses.

If you have more exotic tastes, there are Oriental, European and South American boutiques on Rideau and Sparks Streets.

Woman carries flowers to Zagreb market

Tito regime warming to tourist business

By MARY SCHAFF

Yugoslavia has made big strides toward modernization since it chose its "independent road to socialism" under Marshall Tito after the Second World War.

As its population shifts from the countryside to urban areas and the industrial jobs available there, highrise apartment buildings dot the city scene.

Although many of the ethnic minorities cling to their traditions, city dwellers keep up with western trends. Youths have made denim jeans and jackets almost a uniform.

In the 1960s Yugoslavia began to develop tourism along its scenic and mild Adriatic coast. Hotels and restaurants have sprouted up there to cater to international visitors. Skiing and other tourist facilities are being developed in the mountains.

Many private farmers stick to traditional methods of agriculture, although they do not produce the economic growth that more modern systems might. And peasants continue to peddle their flowers, cheeses, and other produce at roadside stands or in village markets.

Russian tourists scanning Dubrovnik

Refugees travel home to a healing Hungary

By ROBIN MESZOLY

BUDAPEST — "I think you'll like this place," our Budapest friend says as he leads up the pathway to the small restaurant. We can hear accordion music and singing inside. "The food is good and it's informal."

Indeed it is. A cozy, wood-panneled place called Kikelet, with a clientele of about 25 Hungarians, who are singing folk and operetta songs, and a beret-sporting accordion player.

We sit down, order wine, and are just beginning to tap our feet to the music when suddenly a man stops singing, points to us and cries out: "Those three are not members of the Brigade Club!"

And thus, we are inducted into a Communist factory brigade whose members apparently had something to celebrate that night.

It is an ironic twist in a trip that started out as a trek to trace, in part, the family roots of my husband, whose parents carried him out of their native land just a few days ahead of the advancing Russians, more than 30 years ago. But we also came as tourists, and have found a land full of contrasts and surprises.

Hungary is a country which, 20 years after a violent revolution, is coming into its own as a tourist mecca. Many of those tourists are former refugees. About 20 per cent of the approximately 50,000 Americans who visit Hungary each year are reportedly of Hungarian origin, and some travel agents believe the percentage to be higher. Other tourists pour in from Western Europe, many taking weekend trips from Vienna.

The street activity isn't limited to tourists. Hungarians often joke about their frequent lunch and shopping breaks and, indeed, they jam the streets and subways at all hours.

Budapest today is a city of scaffolds and construction sites as the Hungarians carry out a simultaneous drive to restore their ornate, centuries-old buildings, expand their subway system (oldest on the continent, Hungarians point out with pride), erect grand hotels to accommodate the increasing tourist flow, and put up high-rise apartment buildings to meet an acute housing shortage.

One of the new hotels, opened by Hilton Jan. 1 on Buda's Castle Hill, brings out the Hungarians' penchant to exaggerate. Built beside the Matyas Church, which dated back to the 13th century, the Hilton incorporates the remains of an ancient wall, an old tower and, on the street side, reproduces the Renaissance-era facade of neighboring buildings. On the back side, huge windows afford a view of the hills of Buda, the Danube, and on the other side, Pest. A number of proud citizens report the hotel is booked solid through next year. A stateside check with Hilton shows this isn't so.)

Newsman Calls Cabin Home

COBALT, Ont. (CP) — Early in 1975, Bill McIntyre decided to make his break.

He packed up his wife Fran and 11-year-old son Albert and left a promising newspaper career in southern Ontario for a return to his native north country.

Two years later, he sits and writes in the comfort of a tree-fringed log home he built near the shore of the Montreal River in Gillies Limits, Ont., near Cobalt.

Mr. McIntyre is an advocate of an alternative lifestyle built upon energy conservation and minimum demands upon the economy.

And he believes there are thousands of Canadians who share his feelings.

For his part, Mr. McIntyre is not only writing a book about building log houses, but roughing out plans for a Northern Ontario school for self-sufficiency.

He discovered there is a demand for the skills of self-sufficiency when he offered to teach a course in log-home building for adults for the Haileybury School of Mines.

A skeptical school administration placed a few advertisements and received more than 90 inquiries. Mr. McIntyre is teaching three classes now, each comprising 20 persons.

The instruction is practical, he said, and if he can teach people to avoid all the mistakes he has made himself, they will receive a pretty good basic education in log-house building.

Mr. McIntyre estimates he has spent only $3,000 on materials for his 1½-storey log house.

He arranged with a jobber to buy red-pine logs from the Matabechuan area and made a deal with a sawmill operator to let him cut them to six inches square.

The only professional help he received was from a carpenter who installed the roof beams. Mr. McIntyre made this concession after he and a friend were working on the beams and everything collapsed in a tangle.

Heat is supplied by a wood stove, supplemented with a little oil during cold spells, and Fran cooks on a propane stove.

Long-range plans include the use of solar and wind power and enough farming to provide the family with essentials.

Researchers Seek Clean N-Fuel

BURNABY (CP) — Two Simon Fraser University researchers said Friday they are making good progress in the development of limitless supplies of clean, cheap nuclear fuel.

Dr. Brian Pate and Dr. Ian Thorson, two nuclear researchers whose work is contracted to Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., said it raises the possibility of increasing available nuclear fuel supplies a hundred times.

Pate said in an interview that existing technology makes use of only one per cent of Canada's uranium resources. The remaining 99 per cent, uranium 238, is unusable.

Pate said if the research is successful, it would be possible to use uranium 238 plus vast deposits of thorium as nuclear fuel.

He said thorium converts to an artificial uranium called uranium 233, a material that avoids the production of plutonium, a deadly radioactive material that is almost impossible to handle.

The researchers said one processing plant might service 10 Canadian deuterium uranium Candu reactors and recycle the fuel from the reactors many times.

The main element in the process is a powerful particle accelerator which would hurl protons, a subatomic particle, at a target material still being developed.

The target material would give off a stream of neutrons directed into rods of thorium, which would be converted into artificial uranium.

Pate likened the process to a "wild game of snooker in which you hit the balls so hard that chips fly off them."

The thorium rods would be used directly in reactors as fuel and recycled in the processor several times.

The researchers said the process also would be used to burn waste radioactive material, greatly reducing the length of time it remained radioactive.

They estimate plutonium would be almost completely incinerated in the processor and the waste byproducts would have short periods of radioactivity.

RCMP THREATENED 'TO TAKE MY BABY'

NANAIMO (CP) — A defence witness in a B.C. Supreme Court murder trial testified Friday that police threatened to punch her, take away her child and shoot the man she lived with to force her co-operation in their investigation of the case.

Cathy Connally, now of Duncan, was testifying at the trial of John David Ross, 34, who is charged with the Nov. 1, 1975, slaying of Malcom Preston Cunningham, 23, of Victoria.

Miss Connally was recalled to the stand over testimony by Russell Mutter, the man she lived with and the father of her child.

Mutter's testimony at a preliminary hearing implicated Ross in the crime. During the trial itself, Mutter denied his earlier testimony and said it had been made under police pressure.

Earlier this week, Mutter told the court Ross had not been involved in the shooting and implicated Rodney Steigenberger another Crown witness, in the fatal shooting of Cunningham.

Miss Connally supported Mutter's testimony that a policeman grabbed him by the throat, lifted him off the floor and banged his head on the wall during an incident in February, 1976.

She also testified that RCMP Constable Wayne Dew "threatened to take my baby away" and said he "would punch me in the face."

She testified police "would come around every morning at 7 a.m. and lean on the buzzer until we answered."

Miss Connally said Dew and another constable told her, "If we ever get the chance, we'll shoot them," referring to Mutter and his brother James.

Mr. Justice William Craig told lawyers for the Crown and defence he was allowing greater lattitude than normal in the introduction as Miss Connally's testimony because Mutter's original statement to police was "so blatantly false" it needed explanation.

"This case is bizarre to say the least," the judge said.

Earlier in the trial, Crown witness Gordon Caldwell said Ross borrowed a semi-automatic rifle from Mutter, drove Cunningham and Caldwell to a secluded area near Victoria and shot Cunningham in the back.

The trial continues Monday.

COBBLE HILL ZONING UPHELD

VANCOUVER (CP) — A regional district zoning bylaw temporarily banning commercial development along Cobble Hill Road was upheld Friday in B.C. Supreme Court.

It was the first court attack in B.C. on a regional district bylaw.

The Cowichan Valley Regional District passed the bylaw last Aug. 26 to prevent haphazard development along the highway pending the establishment of an over-all community plan.

The bylaw was challenged by owners of existing commercial property in the area on the grounds that the board acted in bad faith. They claimed the bylaw was passed under the guise of being for general application in the area.

Mr. Justice E. David Fulton ruled that the regional district board acted properly and within the law.

Burnaby Fires Another Chief

Morrison and former assistant chiefs Harry Anderson and Basil Pontifex, both dismissed Wednesday, have been fired for refusing to pledge allegiance to department chief Thomas Nairn.

The department has been in turmoil since Nairn's appointment last year. Nairn, a former Yukon fire marshall, beat out several local men for the chief's job here.

Burnaby alderman Fred Randall said Friday the dismissals are likely to further alienate Nairn from tthe 200-man department.

"And if there's any firing to be done, Nairn should be doing it. He is supposed to be running the department, not the mayor."

Randall was one of three aldermen who voted against municipal council's decision to let the mayor contront the assistant chiefs.

All three dismissed so far have been asled to repudiate a department petition questioning Nairn's qualifications and have been asked to pledge thier support for the new chief.

Instead, the three chiefs fired this week said a letter from the Burnaby Fire-p fighters' Association protesting the demands represents their position.

CPR Posts Reward

KAMLOOPS (CP) — CP Rail has posted a $500 reward for information leading to the conviction of anyone responsible for vandalism which resulted in the derailment of several freight train cars Jan. 16 about 11 miles west of here.

Loans Increase

VANCOUVER (CP) — Personal, farm and business loans in B.C. increased more than national rates in the 12 months ended last June, R. J. Kavanagh, chairman of the B.C. committee of the Canadian Bankers' Association, said Friday. Farm loans went up 31 per cent to $213 million outstanding, business loans were up 23 per cent to $3.47 billion and personal loans were up 26 per cent to $2.52 billion.

Mill Splits Town

HOUSTON(CP) — The proposed location for a $17 million sawmill has caused a split in this town of 2,500 about 150 miles west of Prince George. Mayor Baz Studer and 380 residents have signed a petition opposing the proposed site, a farm one mile from the town. Studer said Friday it would be poor planning to locate the sawmill on good agricultural land.

Shoddy Work Found on Dam

FORT ST. JOHN (CP) — B.C. Hydro spokesmen are blaming shoddy workmanship rather than sub-standard concrete for the honeycombing in the Site One dam 60 miles southwest of here.

Honeycombing or cavities and areas of concrete where the gravel is devoid of cement, was discovered when the forms were removed after the first big pour.

Chris Boatman, construction manager at the site, said the concrete first laid was poured too fast and with too few men manning the vibrating equipment.

He added that the problem was not extensive and that the worst examples were not the cause of major concern.

"All the same," he said, "they were of sufficient magnitude for us to be conducting the drilling program to decide how far it is spread.

"We do not anticipate finding a truly serious situation but as a public body we cannot afford to run the slightest risk."

Boatman said B.C. Hydro had been to blame to some extent for not exercising closer control over the contractor, Atkinson-Commonwealth.

"We are embarrassed about this, because it reflects on us. However, once the situation was discovered we took steps to bring it under control and the honeycombing is confined to the first 60,000 cubic yards to be laid down."

Between July and December the contractor laid over 120,000 cubic yards of concrete for the main mass of the dam, located on the Peace River 14 miles downstream from the W. A. C. Bennett Dam.

Raid Documents Under Review

HARRISON HOT SPRINGS (CP) — The combines investigations branch official responsible for recent searches of Vancouver news rooms said Friday he would take another look at material seized and return any that was not public information.

Combines branch officials searched reporters' desks at two Vancouver newspapers and seized film from television stations earlier this month in an effort to gather material about disruptions of hearings into the activities of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union.

Show your best face to the world . . .

Our faces may not be our whole fortune . . . contrary to popular opinion . . . but they're the only ones we've got . . . so it seems only sensible to take the best possible care of them . . . enlisting the help of an expert in keeping skin clean and smooth and glowing . . . something European women are much more prone to do than a lot of us here! . . . Last fall Mrs. Irene Schien, a European-trained aesthetician, opened a delightful little skin care centre called "Cosmetique a la carte" . . . Not long ago she gave us a face treatment which was sheer bliss . . . and left our skin squeeky clean! Treatment is quite different from the old-fashioned "facials" . . Mrs. Schien decides what your skin needs . . . then you get a facial sauna, deep poore cleansing, massaging with delicious French creams, toning and refreshing of the skin . . . A full two-hour treatment for just $15 . . . As Mrs. Schien pointed out to us, a facial is not just to make you look good, but if treatments are started early enough, they can retard aging . . . this care pays off real dividends in later life . . . But no matter when you have it, it will make your skin look much better . . . and make you feel like a million dollars . . . Why not phone for an appointment and find out for yourself what professional skin care can do for you? . . . Cosmetique a la carte, 830 C Pembroke St., 388-5353.

Bias Barrier No Surprise

Barriers that prevent women from achieving their full potential in the federal public service are being discovered and efforts made to see they are removed.

That's the news out of the Public Service of Canada's Office of Equal Opportunitites for Women, in Ottawa.

Plans submitted to the Treasury Board Secretariat (TBS) by federal government departments, along with facts and figures about the present status of their female employees, have been analysed and are ready for the first year of action.

TBS analysts Mary Horswill and Linda Sword, who studied, summarized and analysed these plans, say that present conditions of female employment with the federal government reflect general patterns in Canadian life — that of traditional career orientation and the attitudes associated with this.

Their major findings come as no surprise!

The distribution of men and women across all departments by occupation category, group, and level, follow the same pattern — the majority of women are employed in the administrative support category and where women are employed in officer or professional positions, they are invariably concentrated in the lower levels of these groups.

Particularly in specialized professional departments, there are few paraprofessional or entry level officer positions to provide a "career ladder" from administrative support to officer level positions.

Where women have become segregated in traditional occupations — either at the professional or non-professional level, they are seldom able to achieve either vertical mobility (within the occupation) or horizontal mobility (to exchange one line of work for another).

Finally, when men are employed in groups where women make up the largest number, they are more likely than women to hold positions at the supervisory level.

"The critical difference that we found existing between men's and women's groups," says Mary Horswill, "was precisely this matter of career paths and mobility."

Where plans for action are concerned, departments fall into two groups. Those proposing essentially research and review activity "in order to get a handle on the most appropriate strategy for them to take" and the others, who have already undertaken situation reviews, and whose approach is more active.

Research — by the first group — includes review of job requirements and classifications, monitoring of staffing actions, development of inventories of qualified women, survey of attitudes and identification of training needs.

Departments embarked on a more active course are stepping up their external recruitment of women, providing training and development programs, career counselling and awareness development.

Two essential elements operating to make the entire affirmative action policy and program real and tangible, according to the analysts, are the requirements for annual statistical data and evaluation criteria from the departments.

This is being taken care of in implementation guideline issued to departments from the Treasury Board Secretariat.

The guidelines request annual "situation reviews" — statistical tables to show the proportion of men and women in each occupational category, group, sub-group and level, as well as an interpretation of the data to identify just what factors are contributing to differences in representation.

Comparison of this data, year by year will illustrate whatever real change is accomplished in line with the government's objective.

This objective is spelled out as "that within a reasonable period of time, representation of male and female employees within the public service approximates the proportion of qualified and interested persons of both sexes available, by department, by occupational group and by level."

The evaluation criteria, too, will help to assure that both the departments and the Treasury Board may measure extent to which specific objectives are attained.

TBS analysts Horswill and Sword found that "a great deal of thought, preparation and goodwill" were expressed in the plans they scrutinized. Also that "senior management is becoming more and more involved, on a personal level, in making things happen."

They are now looking forward to seeing and analysing 1977-78 plans that will come in this year "with the comparative data that will be available," also a five-year plan (1977-82) required at the same time.

They recognize — as everyone does — that "the federal government is just one employer among many in Canada, and that the prevailing social conditions of the country affect us all."

Thus, for permanent change to occur within the public service, "there must also be changes in society at large in the employment patterns of women."

Within the public service, however, they feel one thing that departments can do is take steps "to ensure that they are not accentuating traditional orientations through their organizational structures, the requirements they attach to jobs, and their use of the classification system in general."

In my next column I'll tell you how these plans for action are expected to affect women in regional offices — as seen through the Office of Equal Opportunities For Women in the Public Service of Canada.

NIGHT GLAMOR

TORONTO (CP) — Nightgowns for Valentine-giving are reminiscent of the '30s and '40s, says Rita Dennis, designer for Kayser of Canada Ltd., a lingerie manufacturing firm.

They are made of satin in soft colors, lavishly trimmed with lace and feature deep-cut necklines and backs she said.

Lingerie in general is more seductive and feminine, said Miss Dennis. Seductiveness is achieved by the use of such fabrics as nude-colored net over a sexy black-lace bodice and matching bikini panties.

VALENTINE VAMP with the sexy look in long nightgowns is reflected in this see-through, machine-washable outfit. The gown is made of nude-colored polyester net, with black lace bra and matching black lace bikini panties.

Auto Before Baby

DEAR ABBY: The son of a wealthy professional man has gotten a girl pregnant. That may not be unusual, but the boy's father bought him a new car with the understanding that the boy not marry the girl. This I consider most unusual.

The girl is forced to go on welfare. The cost of pre-natal care and delivery, plus the cost of raising the child will be at the taxpayers' expense.

As a taxpayer I resent the idea of supporting the grandchild of a wealthy man. However, what do you advise in such a situation? The district attorney seems to feel that welfare is the answer. — DEE DEE ESS.

DEAR DEE: Pity a male who is old enough to become a father but isn't man enough to handle his own problems. The wealthy professional man who would bribe his son to forestall marriage, but then offer no financial help to the girl and-or the child is as morally guilty as the son for evading any responsibility for the consequences of his actions.

To fill the gap created by such moral cop-outs, the U.S. government has created Aid to Dependent Children. And for the sake of the innocent children, it's a good thing it did.

DEAR ABBY: We are older people who have just bought a light-colored carpet. We cannot afford to replace it, so we have bought 10 pair of slippers for guests to put on before coming into our house.

The problem: We have a dear friend (he's also a relative) who refuses to remove his shoes and use the slippers we have provided for our guests.

His wife still comes, using the slippers, but he refuses to come if he has to wear the slippers.

Please advise us. — MINUS ONE GUEST.

DEAR MINUS: Carpets, including light-colored ones, were made to walk on. If you want this uncooperative guest to visit you, make an exception to the rule and don't make a big deal out of it.

CONFIDENTIAL TO BIBLE STUDENT: Psychiatry is not an atheistic concept. The greatest textbook on human behavior ever written is the Bible in which the principle of psychoanalysis was set forth 3,000 years ago.

"And ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." (New Testament, John VIII: 32.)

Not until one knows "the truth" about himself, complete with all the grim hostilities, insecurities and unresolved conflicts, is he truly "free."

It is the role of the psychiatrist to remove the camouflage, self-deception and rationalizations, and to bring the unconscious conflicts into the conscious mind where reason can deal with them. Once reason is gained, the cure begins, because the truth does make one free.

DOG KEEPS EAR WATCH

LEWISVILLE, Tex. (AP) — Linda Davis is deaf, but when her child is born next month, she won't have to worry about the agonizing problem faced by most deaf parents: the inability to hear a crying baby. Mrs. Davis has a "hearing ear" dog, trained to do the listening for her.

An 18-month-old Australian shepherd named Banjo, trained by tape recorder, will stay within hearing range of the baby and will dash to Mrs. Davis whenever the baby cries.

Mrs. Davis, whose hearing was impaired at birth and was lost completely by last July, is one of the first to receive a hearing ear dog.

your health

By Lester L. Coleman, M.D.

I'm miserable with pain in my ear. Doctors haven't been able to find the reason. One of them thought that my teeth might be causing the pain in my ear. My teeth are in perfect condition. — MRS. C. M.

DEAR MRS. M.: I vote with the doctor who thinks that your teeth could be the cause. Actually, this is not due to the condition of your teeth themselves. Rather, it may be due to the bite, or the occlusion, of your upper and lower teeth.

In the absence of any obvious disease of the ear, changes within the structure of the jaw joint are always considered as a possible source of pain deep within the ear.

The jaw joint is a highly sensitive one and reflects any imbalance in the bite of the teeth. A small sac in the jaw joint is known as a "bursa," similar to the one that is present in the shoulder, the elbow or the knee. The bursa can become inflamed and irritated when the bite is off-balance.

The nerve that goes to the tender jaw joint has branches that run deep to the ear drum. Pain may extend to it, and even down the neck and shoulders.

There are now many refined techniques by which the jaw joint can be studied by the dentists specializing in this particular field.

Only then can the cause of your pain be identified and effectively treated.

Wonderful World of Animals

Cat-Seat Good for Feline

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: Little Bear, our Persian, loves to park herself on the windowsill whenver the sun't hitting it. My husband wants to put a plant in the window in her favorite spot. Is it true she doesn't get any good out of the sunligst corming through the window, anyway? He says she gets all the Vitamin D she needs in her food, so the sun does nothing but warm her up a little, and she does have a spot next to the heat register. — D.E.

DEAR D.E.' Commercial cat foods contain adequate Vitamin D, true. Cats can be warmed more efficiently next to the radiator than next to the window — it could be quite cold on that windowsill if the sun were feeble. Still, the sill spot can contribute to your cat's good health. Visual variety and-or simply soaking up the sun is highly beneficial to Little Bear's psyche.

DEAR DR. MILLER: The judge kicked my weimaraner out of the show just because he was limping. I don't think he was being fair because anyone could see he'd pulled out his toenail. Of course it was sore. When you go to all the trouble to show a dog, I just don't think it's fair for some little thing like that to ruin it. — S.S.

DEAR S.S.: Some dog show rules seem petty. A few perhaps are, but not this one. A judge has no way to evaluate a dog's gait when it's limping from a pulled toenail, rut pad or whatever. Consider, too, some unscrupulous owners might claim the pain was in the foot whereas it might acteually be, for example, in a hip as the result of a condition such as hip dysplasia.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Some of my mother's and my fish have been dying from a very strange disease. White spots, and then the fish lies down in the bottom of the tank and dies. What could be making them die! — C.T.

DEAR C.T.: Various fungal and bacterial diseases, and even some caused by parasites, may cause "white spots" and death in fish. Whether any of the fish in that tank could still be (or could have been) saved would be difficult to determine. It depends on the condition of the surviving fish and general tank conditions as well. In many cases where a tank "epidemic" occurs, it's better to start over completely with better environmental conditions and clean, healthy fish. Putting any new fish in such an old tank would invariably be a mistake. (Get some help from a local expert.)

Relax with Needlepoint

By MAX E. MACLEAN

On a recent trip to Vancouver, I was pleasantly surprised to see the number of women doing needlepoint. It's an excellent craft to relax with, and certainly very rewarding for the time spent.

There was another passenger just across the aisle from me. It was her first attempt at needlepoint, she told me. Having purchased the whole kit quite reasonably, she found it fascinating to do and hoped to have the cushion finished by the end of her vacation.

There was also the Air-Canada stewardess. After all her chores of lunch, she was sitting quietly at the back of the aircraft, putting in a few minutes at her needlepoint picture.

Even the cashier of the carpark at Vancouver airport was sitting in her booth, enjoying the sun and working at her needlepoint between customers. And I'm sure that everybody who watched the Conservative leadership on TV noticed how the camera zoomed in on one lady quietly knitting amidst all that confusion.

It's good to have something to do with your hands on a long journey, it's both rewarding and relaxing, and the time passes a little quicker.

Several people have asked me recently the correct stitch for needlepoint. The tent stitch as it is known in Europe, or the continental stitch as it is called in North America, is the original stitch for tapestry. This stitch is a kind of back-stitch which results in more wool on the wrong side of work.

Remember, in the old days, tapestries were used mainly for warmth and comfort in keeping out the cold and draughts. Over the years their usuage has changed until now it is strictly ornamental.

If you can think of the cross of the canvas threads which you will be covering as N.S.E. and W. You will bring your needle up in the S.W. hole and down in the N.E. hole, then bring it up again further along in the next S.W. hole, moving to the left.

Try working this stitch and you will readily see that you have almost twice as much wool on the wrong side of work. It gives extra padding to your needlepoint and you'll find that it covers the canvas completely.

For the half crosss-stitch which is the other popular stitch, the needle is taken down in the hole of the canvas and brought out in the hole immediately below, for this stitch you usually begin at the left side of work and move to the right.

It doesn't take near as much wool as the tent or continental stitch, but there is a tendancy if you pull your stitches too tightly, for the rows to separate, so be very careful.

This week's pattern is a cosy stylish little jacket, knitted in a fascinating eyelet-rib pattern, just right for wear in the early Spring evenings! Knit it in pastel colours for wear with slacks, skirts or casually over summer dresses. Directions given are for sizes 12 through 18 for bust measurements 32 through to 38 inches, in a lightweight double knitting wool.

To order Leaflet No. 0276, send fifty cents in coin, plus a stamped self addressed return envelope, a long one if possible. If you do not have a stamp or envelope, please enclose an extra 25 cents to cover cost of handling and print your name and address. Send to: May E. MacLean, Knit and Chat, (Box B) 486 Montford Drive, Dollard des Ormeaux, Que. H9G 1M6. Please be sure to state pattern number when ordering and to enclose your stamped return enveloe for quiker delivery. Allow two weeks for your pattern.

INDOOR GARDEN

By LYNN and JOEL RAPP

Dear Lynn and Joel: You advised in one of your columns against using garden soil for indoor plants. I had been doing just that and couldn't understand why my plants were so unhappy. Can you tell me more about soil and how I can prepare it for indoor use?—H.G.

Dear H.G.: It's a definite no-no to use outdoor soil for houseplants. When you prepare soil for planters, remember that the physical state of the soil is even more important than its chemical composition. In other words, the primary requirement for any planter soil is adequate drainage. Plant roots require plenty of air. In order to insure a constant supply of air, the soil must encourage good drainage and so should consist of fairly coarse particles.

Plants growing in containers exist under artificial conditions.

The soil is more firmly packed than garden soil and is watered more often so the planter soil quickly becomes drained of nutrients and filled with roots. Because of this, planter soil should be specialy mixed. In general, your indoor plants will grow better and require less care if the soil you use is combined with ingredients that will provide better drainage, hold additional moisture and increase fertility.

Indoor potting mix is available at every nursery, plant store and supermarket. Some are better than others and we recommend you try them all and find the one you like best.

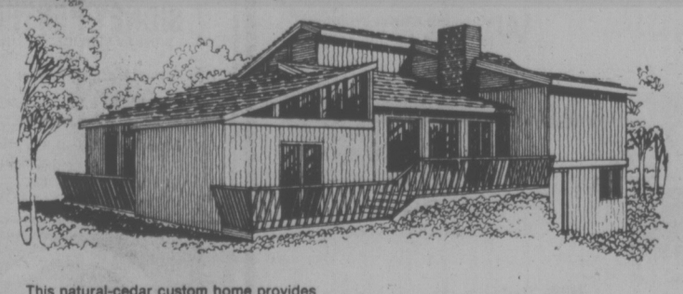
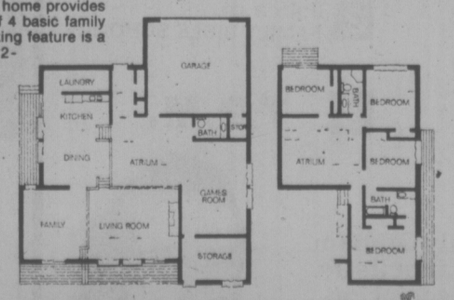
LINDAL CEDAR HOMES
Designed around a "4-story" garden.



This natural-cedar custom home provides separate levels for each of 4 basic family activities. But its most striking feature is a large central atrium — a 22-ft.-high, year-round garden court which faces the entry-level foyer, but can be seen and enjoyed from every level.

The entry level also includes garage, large game area, storage room and half bath. Four steps up are the dining area, kitchen, laundry and family room. Level 3 is devoted to a formal living room, located in the center of the illustration above; 4 bedrooms and 2 baths occupy the 4th-level quiet zone.



Containing more than 3,000 sq. ft., plus garage, this made-to-order plan is a dramatic example of the design flexibility inherent in our precut, engineered homes. Send $2 for Planbook and design kit.

Pope's paper 'not damaging'

TORONTO (CP) — A papal document barring women from becoming Roman Catholic priests will probably not damage prospects of union with the Anglican Church, says Most Rev. Edward Scott, Primate of the Anglican Church of Canada.

He said that the Vatican document, released Thursday, "does not talk of the future" of women in the priesthood.

"It is an attempt by the Roman Catholic Church to clarify its current position," he said.

The Anglican prelate added that the document would not likely affect talks about an eventual union of the two churches, proposed by a committee of church officials last week.

The papal document said women would not be admitted to the priesthood because Jesus Christ was a man and his representatives on earth must bear a "natural resemblance."

The Anglican Church of Canada ordained its first women priests on Nov. 30, 1976, and the Episcopal (American Anglican) Church admitted women to the priesthood earlier this month.

Pope Paul warned the Archbishop of Canterbury in a letter last year that if the Anglicans proceeded with ordination of women it would constitute a major block to unity.

One noted Toronto Catholic priest and scholar said in an interview that when he read the Pope's letter to the archbishop, he could have wept.

"To argue that the church can't ordain women because it has never done so in 2,000 years is a clear case of male chauvinism," he said.

Laura Sabia, a Roman Catholic and former chairman of the Ontario Status of Women council, said she was "appalled at my own church."

"No wonder the validity and the integrity of the church is being questioned. It can't go anywhere but down in the estimation of intelligent people."

She added that Roman Catholic women would likely begin a campaign in about a month to allow women into the priesthood.

Joanne Dewart, who teaches in the faculty of theology at Toronto's St. Michael's College, Toronto, said people were saved by Christ as human persons, not as males.

"A priest represents Christ not as a male, but as a member of the church . . . He represents both men and women and it is as appropriate for a woman to represent Christ as it is for a man."

Stupidity starves millions

TORONTO (CP) — Millions of people throughout the world are starving because of greed and stupidity, not because of food scarcity, an Anglican minister told an inter-faith service here.

Rev. Robert Gardner, national co-ordinator of the Inter-Church Committee for World Development Education, said about 70 million people throughout the world were starving because of government ineptitude.

"There is enough grain alone to feed everyone in the world to the North American standard of 3,000 calories a day," said Gardner, whose organization is supported by the Anglican, Roman Catholic, Presbyterian, United and Lutheran Churches.

Historic church fills pulpit

United Church rector to serve Anglican-based church

The Church of Our Lord will have a new rector in mid-April when Rev. Dr. Andrew Mowatt takes charge of the historic church.

Mowatt will succeed Bishop Gordon Stacey of Vancouver who has been rector for the past five years.

He will be the first full time minister the church has had since the death of Bishop Denys Rankilor.

Stacey, who lives in Vancouver where he operates a counselling centre, has been commuting to Victoria on weekends. This isn't always easy. Last Sunday the church's new rector filled in for Stacey because he was fogbound on the Mainland.

Mowatt, a United Church minister, has been assistant to Rev. Bruce Molloy of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church for the last 3½ years.

A native of Montreal, he spent the first 11 years of his life in Honan, China, where his father, Rev. Dr. Joseph Mowatt, was a missionary of the Presbyterian Church before union with the Methodist Church.

In 1922, at the age of 11, he returned to Canada to continue his education in Montreal. After graduation from McGill he served churches in Quebec before becoming an army chaplain in the Second World War.

He landed in Normandy with the Queen's Own Rifles on D Day as their chaplain and was later awarded the Belgian Croix de Guerre and Palm and named a Chevalier of the Order of Leopold II with Palm.

After the war he went back to Quebec for two years then answered a call to Wesley Church in Calgary.

He had become a sea cadet chaplain in Montreal and continued with the naval reserve until 1951 when he was made a senior chaplain in the permanent force.

His duties took him to both coasts and he went to sea on the cruiser HMCS Quebec, the aircraft carrier HMCS Magnificent and the destroyer HMCS St. Laurent.

From 1958 till 1962 he was on staff and served as chaplain at Royal Roads Service College and from 1963 to 1966, when he retired, he was Command Chaplain West Coast.

He went to Wesley-Willis Church in Clinton, Ont., in 1966 but took advantage of the opportunity to return to Victoria as assistant at St. Andrew's in 1973.

Mowatt sees a solid future for the congregation which worships in the oldest church building in continuous use in the city of Victoria.

"People from all denominations are coming," he said this week. "And a lot of tourists attend. I'd like to see us do something to encourage young people. That will be one of the projects I'll be working on."

Mowatt and Molloy last year took part in the 100th anniversary service of the church. The congregation had been formed in 1874 and the church was built two years later.

At the first service in the present building, on Jan. 16, 1876, the minister of Wesley Methodist Church, which no longer exists in Victoria, and the minister of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, which moved into its present building in 1890, took an active part.

The Church of Our Lord recently lost its assistant minister, Rev. Harry Gleeson, who died Nov. 9 after a short illness.

A native of Cheshire, England, he lived in Campbell River for 30 years. He was a lay reader at St. Peter's Anglican Church there for 20 years and, on retiring to Victoria five years ago, he began attending the Church of Our Lord.

In March, 1975, at the age of 71, he was ordained as a minister of the Reformed Episcopal Church and became assistant to Bishop Stacey, a post he held until his death.

Cathedral plans celebration for queen's Silver Jubilee

The Silver Jubilee of Queen Elizabeth II will be celebrated at a service at 3 p.m. Sunday, Feb. 6, in Christ Church Cathedral, organized by The Monarchist League of Canada, Victoria branch.

King George VI died Feb. 6, 1952.

Lieutenant-Governor Walter Owen will represent the queen. He will attend with Mrs. Owen. An armed forces delegation will be headed by Rear-Admiral and Mrs. A. L. Collier.

Maj.-Gen. and Mrs. George Pearkes and other Monarchist League members will be in the congregation. MLAs and local mayors have been invited.

Cadets from Royal Roads, Rainbow sea cadets, air cadets and cadets of the Canadian Scottish Regiment (Princess Mary's) and the PPCLI will be present.

In the absence of Bishop Roy Gartrell, who is recuperating after surgery, the sermon will be given by Bishop R. J. Pierce, formerly of Athabaska.

Bishop Remi de Roo, who will be in Africa, will be represented by Rev. Philip Hanley.

Also attending will be Rev. Bruce Molloy of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church and Rev. John Wood, chairman of the Victoria Presbytery of the United Church.

The service, to be arranged by Dean Brian Whitlow, will be based on the one prepared by the Archbishop of Canterbury for use throughout the U.K. on June 5.

The cathedral's music director Beale Thomas will lead his choir and members of St. Michael's University School, Norfolk House and Glenlyon School choirs.

They will sing the Te Deum as it was sung at the thanksgiving service of Queen Elizabeth I after the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588.

Among others expected at the service will be members of the Royal Canadian Legion, Royal United Services Institute, Royal Commonwealth Society, IODE, English Speaking Union, Girl Guides and Boy Scouts as well as the general public.

Missionaries back to tell about work

Two missionaries who formerly lived in Sidney will take part in the 11 a.m. Sunday service at Glad Tidings Pentecostal Church.

Rev. Verdun Delgatty, who was pastor at the Sidney Pentecostal Church, and his wife Rhoda, will tell of their work in the Philippines and Samoa.

At the 7 p.m. service, Mrs. Florence Spence will speak. An outstanding linguist and educator, she will be returning to Hong Kong on special assignment. She and her husband spent several decades in missionary work in China and Hong Kong.

God's spirit talk topic

The seminars will consist of lectures, group discussions and actual help in entering into a live encounter with God's spirit.

An introductory meeting will be held at 8 p.m. Friday in the fellowship room of the church. Contents and proceedings of the course will be explained. The seven sessions will start Feb. 11 and continue on consecutive Fridays.

Still room to join growth groups

There is still room for people in two growth groups of the Greater Victoria Citizens' Counselling centre which begin next week.

One group is for couples either newly married or preparing for marriage. It begins at 7:30 p.m. Monday in Metropolitan United Church and costs $11 per couple for eight weeks.

The other is a transition group for people who are going through some change in life such as loss of a mate, friend or other loved one, change of job or living area, retirement or the adjustment period experienced by parents when children grow up and leave home.

This group starts at 9:30 a.m. Friday at the church and costs $7 for eight weeks. Registration for either may be made at the centre, 384-6934.

Time short for trip registration

Time is running out for registration for a charter trip to England and Israel in September now being arranged by Emmanuel Baptist Church.

Trevor De Casseres, church administrator, said this week that Wednesday is the deadline.

Planes are filling up fast, he said, because of the Jubilee Year of Queen Elizabeth.

The tour leaves Vancouver on Sept. 1 for London and returns Sept. 29. There are five options, ranging from $435 for the trip to London and return, to $1,535 for two weeks in Israel and a week in Jersey with all accommodation and food and a week in England with most of the food and accommodation included.

SAFE, CHEAP TRANSPORTATION

Alberta Eyes Dirigible Freighters

By AB KENT
Times Staff

Freighters sailing over the northern Alberta muskeg and into Arctic wasteland would sound like an eerie peek into dreamland if it weren't actually being considered.

Feasibility of airship transportation is being studied by the Alberta government as a practical, pollution-free method of hauling freight into remote developments and for southbound transport of oil, natural gas and mineral wealth.

If the idea ever gets off the ground the Alberta transportation ministry should consult a former B.C. logger who has been interested in airships and involved with balloons for more than a decade.

Frank Mosher, a Canadian who pioneered balloon logging in an experiment by MacMillan Bloedel at Sproat Lake, started a company in Oregon and used a computer to design a special non-rigid balloon to lift a 30-ton cargo.

The design would have had a capacity of about 1.5 million cubic feet of lifting gas, or about one-fifth the size of the largest airship ever made.

It would have been for logging with an inverted skyline without the need for expensive road access in territory where engineering is difficult.

But the capital costs of such a balloon scared off companies which were also reluctant to develop their lands without roads. The need of access for fire protection and forest management is a strong argument for road-building.

Mosher never built one of these craft, estimating the cost of a smaller type at $800,000-$1,000,000 and $1.5-$2 million for a larger one.

He is now logging manager for St. Regis Paper Co. in Tacoma, and is still one of the few authorities on balloon logging.

Limited development of non-rigid ships has taken place in the last decade in B.C. and Oregon logging industries.

On Vancouver Island, MacMillan Bloedel tried using surplus barrage balloons of about 75,000 cubic feet for yarding logs in its Sproat Lake division in 1954. Balloons were tried singly and in tandem, controlled by winch cables on the ground.

The problem of insufficient lift capacity, helium leakage and lack of aerodynamic stability rendered the system impractical.

Some selective logging by balloon also was done in the Vancouver watershed to thin stands without disturbing the ecology.

Mosher worked nearly 10 years for Bohemia Lumber at Eugene, Ore., experimenting with V-type balloons made by Goodyear and shaped for better aerodynamic and buoyant lift.

These did not work well in winds of more than 20 knots, behaving, Mosher said, "like a kite without a tail," even though lift was improved to about 10 tons or more than four times that of barrage balloons.

"One thing a person finds after working with balloons 10 or 12 years is that there are times when Mother Nature hammers the hell out of them, and the balloon comes down."

People have to be realistic, and such danger must loom large in the minds of investors to whom "dollars cents count," Mosher said.

"But there is nothing more beautiful than seeing those turns of logs coming in when everything is going right."

An organization called the Alberta Airship Group tabled a report at the fall sitting of the legislature which discusses the feasibility of natural gas transport from the Arctic and urged the province to study the economics of setting up an airship construction industry.

"It is conceivable there could be an airship industry in Alberta," deputy minister of transportation Rowland McFarlane was quoted.

The province already owns Pacific Western Airlines and is the first province to engage in hovercraft development.

There are three basic areas of airship application to heavy transport: the rigid frame with fabric or thin aluminum skin; the non-rigid with a minimum of frame construction; and the aerodynamic balloon without self-contained motive power.

Venezuela recently ordered 22 non-rigid airships from Aerospace Developments in the U.K. to be used for freight and survey tasks. They are described as small, cheap and flexible in their role.

The first will be 165 feet long, 47 feet high, carry 2.2 tons and cost under $20 an hour to operate. Capital cost is $450,000.

The West German government has been testing a Goodyear type blimp in Ghana and Upper Volta, a 198-foot craft using helium gas whose trials are expected to lead to a larger airship with 40-ton capacity.

The U.S., a leader in non-rigid types, is said to be working on a rigid design for its navy and Russia is researching dirigibles powered by atomic energy.

Hydrogen gas is the lightest element, is easily manufactured, cheap and the supply is unlimited. It is also the most volatile and hazardous, as early airship disasters have proven.

Modern airships use helium gas for lifting power, providing 92.6 per cent of hydrogen's buoyancy.

For every 1,000 cubic feet of helium there is enough lift to raise 69.58 pounds. An airship of 1 million cubic feet capacity would be required to lift 30 tons.

That would be a fraction of the size of the largest rigid-frame airship, the ill-fated Hindenburg, whose 7 million cubic foot envelope exploded and burned with the loss of 36 lives May 6, 1937, at Lakehurst, N.J. The gas was hydrogen.

A familiar sight these days is the Goodyear blimp

Hindenburg was 804 feet long, powered by four Mercedes Benz engines, and carried 50 passengers at 78 m.p.h.

The accident ended active airship development by Germany until after the Second World War, during which the most notable use of airships was by the U.S. Navy for anti-submarine patrol and marshalling ship convoys.

Since then the Americans have used these non-rigid types successfully as radar platforms to screen coastal approaches by unidentified aircraft.

There has been little competition to the limited American interest in airship technology, perhaps due to the virtual command of all the world's most plentiful reserves of helium by the U.S.

This chemically inert gas occurs in large quantities in the natural gas fields of Kansas and Texas, principally, but it is also found in small amounts in Alberta. Its applications include welding, optometrics, metereology and medicine.

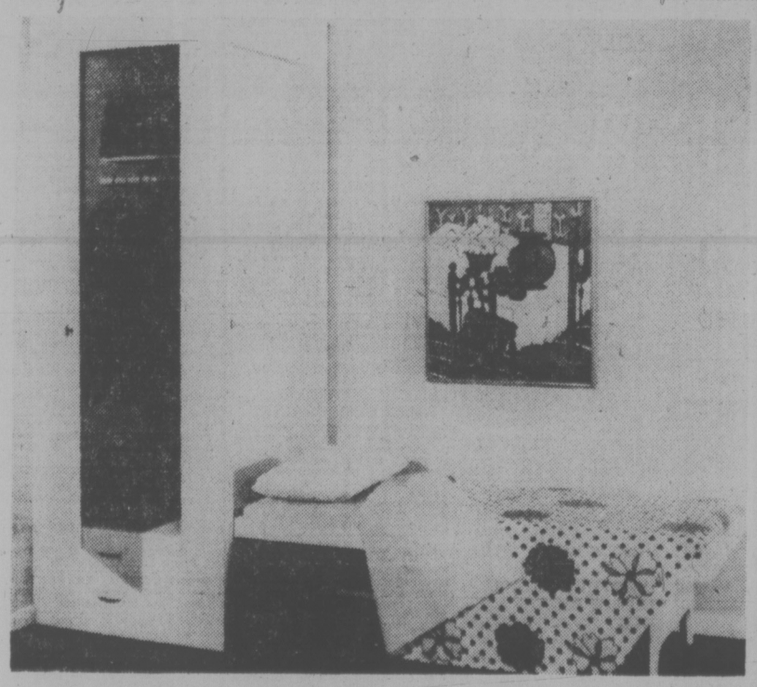
The Goodyear Rubber Co., which has built nearly all successful U.S. blimps since 1911, began operating its own helium-filled fleet of non-rigid airships in 1925, mainly for promotional and advertising purposes.

A standard Goodyear blimp is 123,000 cubic feet and carries six passengers. It was this type that the U.S. Navy took over during the war.

In civil use up to 1959 Goodyear airships had made more than 178,000 flights carrying in excess of 483,000 passengers without an injury.

Compared with the huge volumes of natural gas or petroleum, for example, that may be transported by pipeline, the tonnage capacity of conventional airships is small and may not justify the large capital outlay and potential risk of crashing, even though airships are environmentally clean.

Rigid frame craft are particularly expensive to build, consisting literally of miles of light structural members assembled like a thousand spider webs of aluminum alloy, with an incredible array of ducts, wires, control valves, ballast tanks, plumbing, engine rooms, accommodation, command posts and gangways, besides the principal components, the gas cells.



YOU'LL ALWAYS have room for an overnight guest with this hideaway bedroom. Although it measures only 3x3x8 feet, it has many of the conveniences of a full-size room: closet storage space, dresser drawers and a six-foot, fold-down bed. Made primarily from ¾-inch A-A grade interior plywood, the project is a real breeze to build. Begin by making the basic box, cut out openings for the door, bed and dresser drawers, then attach finished units to box with standard hardware. Finish by sanding the wood smooth, then painting with semi-gloss latex. For the bed, you'll need a four-inch-thick foam rubber mattress. To order the Bedroom In A Box pattern No. 30342, send $2.00 cheque or money order plus 50 cents for postage and handling to Deco-Plans, Victoria Times, P.O. Box 90, Boucherville, Quebec.

Dumped Autos Provide Perfect Fish Havens

By KENDAL WEAVER

DAUPHIN ISLAND, Ala. (AP) — Men can't make the glorious coral reefs of the undersea world, but for a substitute they can take a junk car or a heap of old tires, drop them in the water and call them "fish havens."

Red snappers hardly know the difference.

The state of Alabama discovered this 30 years ago and promptly dropped about 1,500 old car bodies off the Gulf of Mexico coast. Snappers and groupers turned up in droves. So did deep-sea fishermen.

"Alabama was the first state to make these fish reefs," said conservation department biologist Hugh Swingle.

"The only time you find good concentrations of snapper and grouper is when you have a rough bottom, a coral reef, rocks or something like that. The problem here is that in this area the sea bottom is like the top of a pool table."

To create a legal fish haven off the Alabama coast, it is necessary to get a permit from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. Most such permits are sought by the state conservation department, but the department also will sponsor individuals.

Over the years, said Swingle, thousands of tires and cars have been sunk off the Alabama coast along with five Liberty ships, three barges and some tugs. "About 1950, we sank a wooden drydock from the port of Mobile."

The havens might seem like an underwater junkyard but to grouper and snapper they are a handy place to meet and dine.

"They attract the little fish that like to eat the stuff that grows on the tires and other objects. Then the larger fish follow to feed off the little ones," said Swingle.

"Also, fish like something they can relate to. These reefs give them an object where they can orient themselves."

For a novice fisherman, it may not be easy to orient oneself around fish havens. They are not necessarily easy to find.

Buoys were placed to mark a few, but the buoys have a way of drifting or breaking loose.

If the buoy is lost, a bit of shipboard wizardry helps find the fish havens. It is called the Loran directional radio, and it involves nautical maps and the triangulation of points at sea. But some old salts just rely on their nose.

"We were out a way, and he got the boat on course and then just told us to tell him when 20 minutes were up and the sea turtle would be right there," said Smith. "Well, after 20 minutes, we told him, and he went around in a circle and sure enough, there was that big old turtle, floating atop the water. We dropped our lines and the snappers were there."

The sea turtle, explained Smith, had taken a liking to the fish haven and hung out there.

Swingle said it took a while to figure out that junk cars don't make the best fish havens.

"They only last about two or three years, then just rust to pieces. Now we mostly use car tires, chained together. They last almost forever."

The state biologist said a good depth for fish havens is about 90 feet.

Once dropped, you have to give them time to draw a crowd, but when the little fish start arriving and the snappers come to supper, you're in business.

The cooler months are the best months for snapper fishing, with cigar minnows or cut mullet or bonita used as bait. The snapper may range from one pound to 20 pounds.

Weddings

Reichert — Timmons

St. Andrew's Chapel, Naden, C.F. Esquimalt, Victoria, B.C. was the setting for the exchange of marriage vows between Eithne Patricia Timmons and Jeffrey Raymond Reichert on Wednesday afternoon, 29th December, 1976. The sun was shining with a golden glow as the bride and her attendants entered the chapel, which was decorated with a Christmas tree and stands of white mums at each side of the altar. On the pulpit was an anchor of pine, a cross of holly and a silver heart glowed. Holly and silver enriched each pew.

Into this beautiful little chapel came Eithne on the arm of her elder brother, Allen, and preceeded by her youngest sister, Sheila, and her close friend from Ottawa, Miss Beverley Beck, who was followed by the ringbearer, five-year-old Stephen Link, cousin of the groom. The bride designed her gown, of satin and medieval sleeves, and flowing train, inset with lace panels. Scallops of lace framed her face in a lace cape which fell entrain covering her gown. She carried a cascade bouquet of white roses and baby's breath laced with blue ribbon to tone with the bridemaids' gowns, which were of royal blue point de roma with capes trimmed with white fur. They carried fur muffs en corsage. Stephen held a heart-shaped pillow made of satin and lace from the bride's gown, on which two wedding rings rested. He proceeded into the sanctuary and stood facing the wedding party. The candle-lighter was Colin Timmons, younger brother of the bride, who lit the candles on the altar and the candelabra before the procession. The Rt. Rev. R. J. Pierce, D.D. retired Bishop of Athabasca was present in the sanctuary. Eithne was met at the altar by her father, Chaplain E. P. A. Timmons, C.D. and took her place beside Jeffrey, who was attended by his brother Mr. Robert Reichert, M.Sc. The wedding vows were taken by her father, and the wedding prayers by the Bishop. Organist was Miss Kathy Lane, who wove the bride's favourite 'Greensleeves' into the music during the signing of the register. The bride's mother wore a gown of green velvet, with a small train, topped with a pearl mink stole. Seated with her were two daughters, Miss Moira and Miss Margaret Timmons, and Mrs. Valerie Timmons, little Patrick and Christopher Timmons. The groom's mother from Saskatoon was present in a lovely pink gown, and his grandmother looking beautiful in turquoise. The service was taped by the bride's father. The photographer was Mr. Michael Pope. The bride's car was decorated with a blue heart and white doves designed by the groom's uncle, Mr. Kurt Link.

The reception was held in the Balmoral Suite at Holyrood House. Holly decorated the tables and candles added a glow to the dinner tables. The three-tiered wedding cake in blue and white was flanked with the bridal couple's silver goblets engraved to each other. The cake was made by Mrs. Dodie Hammond, a friend of the family. It was covered with hearts of forget-me-nots and topped with a silver cross and wedding rings. The Bishop proposed the toast to the birde, which was ably replied to by the groom. The guests were introduced by Allen Timmons who was master of ceremonies. A delicious smorgasbord was served which everyone enjoyed. Following this, the ceremonial cutting of the wedding cake was carried out, and served by the bride and groom in the sitting room, as the band began the dancing with Elton John's 'Your Song' specially for the bridal couple.

Before leaving on a skiing trip to Banff, Eithne and Jeffrey said goodbye to the guests, wearing matching outfits which had been made by the groom's mother. A full-length Donegal tweed cape from Ireland completed the bride's going away ensemble. The couple now reside in Saskatoon where both are students at the University of Saskatchewan. Jeffrey graduates in Engineering this spring, and Eithne is a third year student in the Nursing Degree programme.

Out-of-town guests were: Mrs. S. Neustadter, grandmother of the groom, Mr. and Mrs. Z. Reichert, parents of the groom, Mr. John Neustadter, uncle of the groom, Mr. and Mrs. John Boldt, Mr. and Mrs. Kurt Link, Monica and Stephen, Mrs. Majel Reichert, all from Saskatoon. Friends of the groom were Mr. Lorne Klassen, Miss Cathy Kurtz, Mr. Douglas Rutherford, also from Saskatoon, Mr. Allen Timmons with his wife, Valerie, and Patrick and Christopher all from Regina, Miss Beverley Beck from Ottawa, Mr. and Mrs. A. Murray and Michael and Stephen from Vancouver, and Miss Elizabeth Hammond, Nanaimo.

Given in marriage by her father and mother, the bride wore a sheer over satin floor length gown made by the groom's mother. The bride carried a bouquet of roses and white baby mums. Patti Fast, sister of the bride, attended as maid of honour and Patsy Farley, groom's sister, Jennifer Jew and Kelly Ash were bridesmaids. They wore yellow gowns with cape sleeves and carried bouquets of white daisies and baby's breath. The groom's attendants, best man, Danny Farley, and ushers Ken Farley, Larry Farley and Carrie Lewis, were attired in brown tuxedos.

DOME PROPOSED FOR ACROPOLIS

ATHENS (AP) — A $40-million air-conditioned glass dome was proposed Friday to cover the Greek capital's 2,500-year-old Acropolis and save ancient monuments there from further decay.

Former Athens mayor George Plytas said the dome is a better and more permanent solution than a plan recently agreed upon between the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Greek government. That plan provides for many of the relics to be removed to museums and replaced on the hill by copies.

Plytas, who was mayor before the 1967 military coup and is running for the office again, said he had talked to Swiss design experts in Geneva about such a dome and had transmitted the proposal to the Athens government. He said the government of Premier Constantine Caramanlis has agreed to study it and meet the Swiss designers.

Plytas said five Swiss experts headed by architect Olivier Rossel are due in Athens Feb. 21-28 for talks with UNESCO and Greek government officials, including Caramanlis, who has taken a personal interest in rescuing the Acropolis antiquities.

Two Soviet Spy Rings Broken by Norwegians

OSLO (UPI) — Norwegian authorities have broken up two separate Soviet espionage rings, arresting a female foreign ministry official and ordering out of the country six Russians, including the Tass News Agency correspondent, Premier Oddvar Nordli said today.

Officials said the cases were the two most serious espionage incidents in Norway since the end of the Second World War.

The foreign ministry identified the arrested official as Mrs. Sunvor Galting Haavik, 65, who has worked in the ministry since 1946.

From October, 1947, until February, 1956, she was attached to the Norwegian embassy in Moscow. Since then she has worked in Oslo dealing with trade political matters.

Three other diplomats ordered out of the country belonged to the Soviet trade mission The Tass correspondent was involved in the trade mission case, Nordli said.

'RE-LIGHT CANDLES' BANNED IN CANADA

OTTAWA (CP) — The sale, advertisement or importation of spontaneously re-lightable candles has been banned in Canada, the consumer affairs department announced Friday.

More Boys Die Early

In a survey of the 10 leading causes of death in Canada in 1974 of youths in the 15 to 19 age bracket, there were 1,977 deaths involving males and 655 involving females.

Motor accidents were the single biggest killer, accounting for half of all the fatalities — 990 males and 337 females.

For males, drowning was the third major cause — 101 deaths — followed by water accidents 63, accidental poisoning 43, homicide 31, firearms 29, explosives 24, hereditary and familial diseases of the nervous system 23 and accidental falls 19.

For females the third major cause was accidental poisoning 22, followed by leukemia and homicide, both 20, congenital anomolies of the circulatory system 12, epilepsy 11, accidents in fires 20, cancer of the brain 9, and strokes 9.

The 10 leading causes of deaths for males and females in all age groups during 1974 — the total was 166,974 — was: heart attack 51,817, stroke 16,481, lung cancer 6,602, motor accidents 6,635, diseases of arteries, arterioles and capillaries 5,801, pneumonia 5,207, other forms heart disease 4,155, cancer of large intestine 3,839, diabetes mellitus 3,164, and suicide 2,902.

Atlantic Museumobile Opens Here on Feb. 18

Most smaller Vancouver Island communities will have the opportunity to see the Atlantic Canada museumobile on tour next month from the National Museum of Canada, says tour co-ordinator Terry Malone of Ottawa.

"It is geared to visit smaller communities like Sooke and Ladysmith," he said during a city visit last week. "It will be set up in shopping centres, school yards, playgrounds and parks."

The museum-on-wheels, which tells the story of the Maritime provinces and Newfoundland, will open in Victoria Feb. 18. It consists of three self-contained trailers designed for the exhibit of artifacts, dioramas and specimens.

Malone said the museum will be set up first on the back lawn of the Legislative Buildings, later moving to other Greater Victoria sites.

He said the National Museum is producing in Vancouver another museumobile dealing with the Pacific Coast. It will tour the Atlantic provinces.

"The Atlantic museumbobile is an attractive museum," he said. "It explores the relationship between man and the sea and traces the geological, social, economic and cultural development of the four Atlantic provinces."

Guides will answer questions and admission is free.

Purchase Boost For Pipeline Set

EDMONTON (CP) — The Energy Resources Conservation Board has recommended that TransCanada Pipelines Ltd. be permitted to purchase natural gas from an additional 80 fields or pools.

The ERCB was responding to TransCanada's application that its permit be amended to provide blanket approval to take gas from any pool or field in the province. No change was sought in the volume of gas taken out of the province under the company's existing permit, which named about 150 natural gas pools and fields.

The board said it was not prepared to recommend blanket approval without further consideration but did not object to an alternative proposed by TransCanada that an additional 80 pools or fields be added.

The company said that if requested areas were not added to its permit, producers would lose some 104 billion cubic feet, valued at $100 million, in 1976-77.

Board representatives promised a report in future to deal with the pipeline company's request for blanket approval.

In its decision, the board calculated Alberta's total gas surplus at 10.5 trillion cubic feet, excluding 2.6 trillion cubic feet available for contracts, at Dec. 31, 1976.

VGH Board Wants Cheap Convention

The board decided Thursday night to draft a resolution for this year's convention — to be held in the Hotel Vancouver in May—proposing that cheaper and less luxurious facilities be used for future conventions.

Board member Alan Patterson said hotels are "too expensive" and other members agreed that the Totem Park Centre at the University of B.C. would be a more sensible site.

Hotel rooms in downtown Vancouver can range up to $45 to $50 a night.

$264,500 For City Projects

The grants made to the Capital Improvement District Commission (CIDC) include:

—The CIDC is provincial government-sponsored advisory body responsible for improvement and beautification projects in the capital district.

Ottawa, B.C. Sign Coal Pact

B.C. and the federal government have signed a 50-50 cost sharing agreement for a $3 million evaluation of coal deposits in north-eastern B.C.

Theag reement was signed by B.C. Economic Development Minister Don Phillips and federal Minister of Regional Economic Expansion Marcel Lessard.

The two governments have been negotiating for several months in an attempt to reach an agreement which would see the development of the northeast's rich coal deposits.

Before development of the coal can go ahead an "infrastructure" of townsites, transportation and port facilities is necessary. B.C. is attempting to get Ottawa to pay a part of the estimated $500 million cost of the infrastructure.

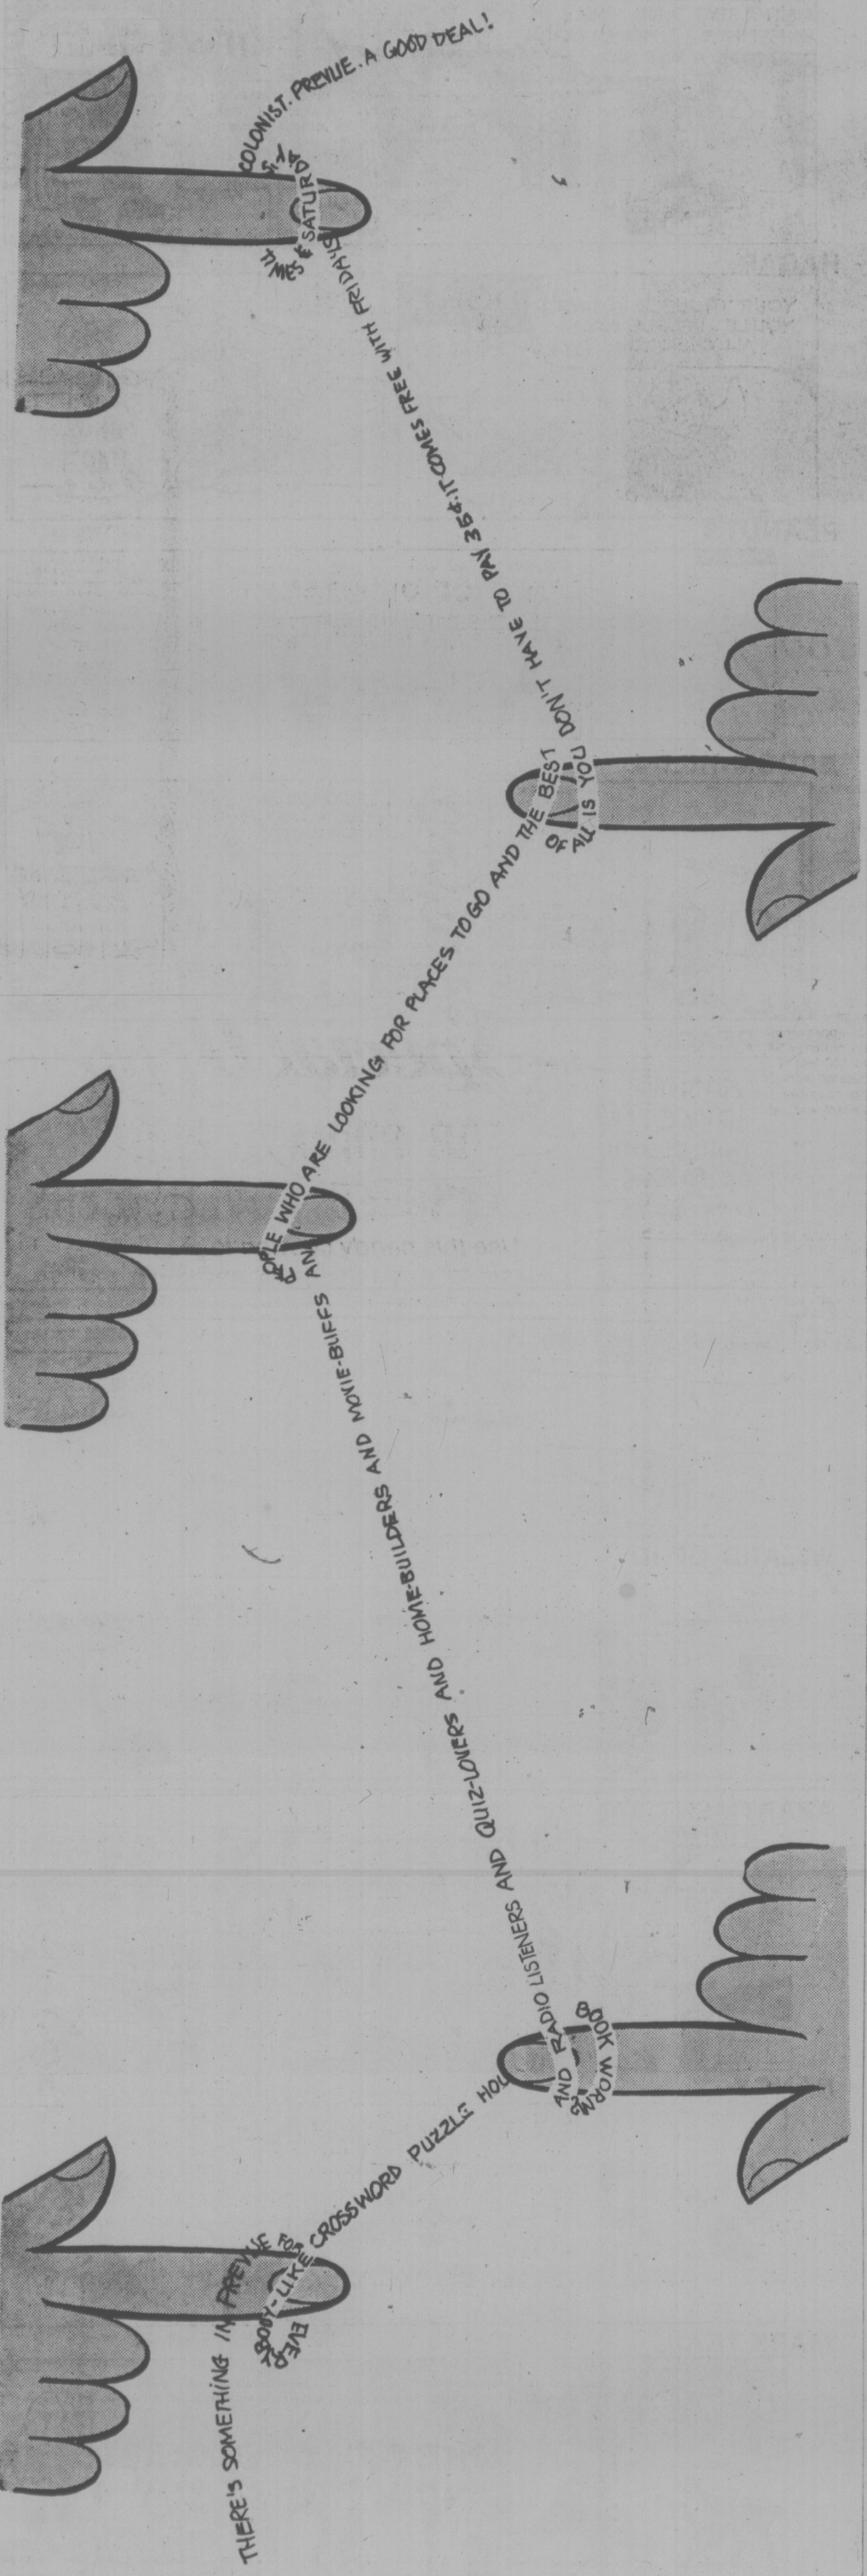
THE DAILY COLONIST AND VICTORIA TIMES



Admiral Urges End to 'Club'

Rear Admiral Andrew Collier is a member of the "zipper club" but the message he delivered to a luncheon meeting Friday was on how to stay out of the organization.

The zipper reference is to the long scar left by open heart surgery. The head of maritime command, Pacific, underwent that operation a couple of years ago and said he has never felt better.

"I can do more, concentrate better and I'm more active than ever before," he told an audience of about 150 at Antonio's, on hand for the kick-off to this year's campaign by the B.C. Heart Foundation.

Heart disease is the number one killer and Collier said education is just as important as research. The foundation makes all sorts of material as well as guest speakers available and helps those who need it with the expenses heart problems bring.

Dr. Scott Wallace, MLA for Oak Bay, drew a laugh when he said: "I belong to a club, too, but we need treatment in the head, not on our hearts."

An outspoken critic of smoking, he said the cost of treating heart disease is astronomical and people will have to change their life style to prevent it.

He also said if society waits for government to provide needed research money, "we'll have to wait a long time."

Eight-nine cents of every dollar collected in the heart campaign goes to research or education, he said, with the balance used for administration.

Oysterman Says Plans Blocked

A North Vancouver businessman Friday accused the Capital Regional District of discriminating against him in his request to remove his Sooke property from the agricultural land reserve.

Eric Joa, president of the Anderson Cove Oysters Ltd., said he wants the property out of the reserve so he can plan its future use when pollution forces closure of his business at Anderson Cove on the south side of Sooke basin.

But he said the region's zoning committee has done nothing but thwart his efforts.

His land, zoned commercially although it is in the reserve, is used for buying, selling, processing and storing fish and shellfish products.

Sooke director Charles Perkins denied the regional district has done anything to prevent Joa from getting the land out.

"His application has been sent to the B.C. Land Commission," he said. "We haven't the authority to do this."

Meanwhile, Dr. Allan Arneil, regional health officer, has been asked by the committee to investigate the septic tank hazard in Anderson Cove, Perkins said.

"The area hasn't changed much in the last few years," he said. "There are a few additional homes at Anderson Cove and some people keep their boats anchored there."

"It's a place we have to watch because there is not much movement of water in the cove," he added. "Our aim is to try to stop the decline of the water quality of Sooke basin."

Walter Raleigh Descendant Dies

TORQUAY, England (AP) — Cmdr. Walter Raleigh Gilbert, nearest descendant of Sir Walter Raleigh, died Wednesday at his home near here. He was 88. Gilbert was a direct descendant of Raleigh's half brother, fellow Elizabethan sailor and explorer Sir Humphrey Gilbert, and had lived in the family home in Compton Castle, where Raleigh lived as a boy.

Mexican Gun Mystique Fueled by U.S. Firearms

By MARLISE SIMONS
Washington Post

MEXICO CITY — They have become status symbols of influence and money: men in dark, shiny suits, eating peanuts or reading comic books, hovering around dark, shiny limousines.

Mexicans call them guaruras — the Aztec word for bodyguards. One cabinet minister admits to having 12, while four prominent and wealthy brothers jointly employ 42 to guard their compound, wives and children. In Mexico today there are in fact uncounted thousands of them.

With their jackets hiding neat little man-stoppers, and with semiautomatic six-pounders under their car seats, guaruras are among the most eager customers of the vast U.S. firearms industry.

But along with guaruras, Mexico's willing clientele of U.S arms dealers also include farmers, dope smugglers, police, government officials, rightists, leftists or anyone else with a stake in defence or attack.

In a country with a gun mystique even surpassing that of the United States, the gun is a natural accessory for many Mexican males. Private arms collections are plentiful and the lotest U.S.-made precision model is a prized possession.

Buying a bullet or pistol in downtown Mexico City used to be as easy as ordering a beer. But the tough 1972 gun control law, aimed at reducing the high rate of violent crime, banned importation, manufacture and sale of weapons — except those used for sport — and closed down the guns stores. Yet it could not halt the brisk import of firearms.

Instead, the trade shifted to the already flourishing black market, where the military and police deal alongside freelance smugglers. Police officials state openly that there are as many illegal arms as there are television sets in this country. "You can call it a nationwide cottage industry," said one police officer.

Earlier this month, testimony before a U.S. Senate committee confirmed that vast amounts of Mexican firearms are smuggled across the 2,000-mile U.S. border. But key officials in the Mexican attorney-general's office dispute claims by Peter Bensinger, director of the U.S. drug enforcement administration, that there is an important direct barter trade of guns and drugs.

"Sure the two countries trade in depth," said one highly placed official. "Mexico sends heroin, the U.S. sends guns. But it's simplistic to talk about barter. One kilo (2.2 pounds) of heroin fetches $80,000 at the border. Imagine paying that with guns."

"Automatic rifles are part of these people's normal work tools. But we find they get two or three, usually as a gift or as a bonus from their U.S. contacts," said a narcotics agent from Culiacan, the reported centre of heroin laboratories in Mexico.

"Dope brings money so you can just as easily talk about dope for cars, dope for TV sets, dope for whatever. Just look around Culiacan and you see the latest model of everything."

There are no reliable statistics on the number of firearms among this country's 63 million inhabitants, although the Mexico City police chief recently suggested there may be 30 million.

Under the 1972 law, each household may obtain a licence for only one small-calibre pistol. All other weapons are reserved for use by army and police. After public pressure, the legislators agreed to consider the car as an extension of the home, so that a family's licensed pistol may be kept in the glove compartment. But it is extremely difficult for a civilian to obtain a licence.

The defence ministry, where firearms must be surrendered or registered, reports that its 1,500 registration offices have recorded about 1.7 million weapons and confiscated 53,000 since the law was passed. But ministry sources agree that this reflects only a small part of the arms in circulation.

Although Mexicans have traditionally owned guns, the arms trade proliferated as rural and urban guerrillas began to kidnap businessmen and politicians in the early 1970s. Not only did the guerrillas buy arms, so did the fast-growing army of private body guards.

As gangsters involved in narcotics acquired powerful AR-15, M-1 and M-16 military rifles, the police were forced to update their arsenals. Since supplies in police headquarters were minimal and outdated, police officials turned to importing arms for tremselves.

"There are plenty of arms around now," said a police lawyer, "but our main problem remains ammunition. An ordinary street cop is only given five bullets by his superiors. If he wants more he has to buy them himself."

"To get ammunition we have to apply to the army. It may take three months to get a reply. And in the end you buy it back from the army anyway so you might as well get your own from the start," a narcotics agent said.

For most Mexicans who have the money to spend, getting hold of smuggled ammunition or almost any calibre of firearms has been easy enough. "Contraband is like a national sport," Mexicans often comment, and its quick profits have attracted hundreds of people who have attracted hundreds of people who have devoted themselves full-time to the sport.

Two Mexico City residents recently traveled to Tijuana, on the California border. One said they ordered a "color television, a pocket calculator, an M-1 and a 38-Super plus plenty of ammunition from a local contact. We paid cash in advance. The next day it was delivered right in our hotel room for less than $1,000."

To stem the gunrunning, Mexican diplomats have frequently asked for U.S. help. U.S. officials in turn say they do not get the information they need from the Mexican side.

"We have often said that if we get the registration number on a confiscated weapon it will help us to track down the gunrunner," said a U.S. embassy official, "But the Mexicans are reluctant to do that, for whatever their reasons may be."

Midnight Bombs Rip London Shops

Times News Service

LONDON — A dozen bombs exploded along Oxford Street early today, closing the busy shopping area while police searched office buildings and stores for more hidden explosives.

Police said no one was injured in the 12 explosions that shattered shop windows and caused three fires just after midnight when the area was virtually deserted. They were the first bombings in London in seven months.

A man claiming to represent the Irish Republican Army said later the IRA was responsible for the bomb blasts.

In a telephone call to The Sunday Mirror newspaper office in Manchester, the man said members of the IRA's Provisional wing planted the bombs.

The message said: "The Provisional IRA claim full responsibility for the bombings in London. The campaign will continue throughout England until the British government announces a declaration of withdrawal of its army out of Northern Ireland."

The blasts occurred 1½ miles west of the Central Criminal Court, known as the Old Bailey, where four Irishmen are on trial. The alleged Irish Republican Army members are accused of bombings and other terrorism that claimed seven lives in London in 1975.

A man and a woman who police said had been "acting suspiciously" in the area of the blasts were taken into custody for questioning. But police said later the two had nothing to do with the bombings.

Police sources said the bombings could be associated with the fifth anniversary of the "Bloody Sunday" shootings of demonstrators by British troops in Londonderry, Northern Ireland, or with the current Balcombe Street siege trial of the four alleged Irish Republican Army bombers.

Police sealed off roads in the West End area as far as Regent Street. The two underground train stations serving the central London shopping district closed for the day.

B.C. Liquor Prices Going Up April 1

The price of liquor in British Columbia is going up April 1 by 20 cents a bottle or more, in the case of some imported wines much more.

That happens to be April Fool's Day but the humor is likely to be lost on people who drop by their local liquor store on a regular basis.

Nick Clark, purchasing agent with the Liquor Administration Branch in Vancouver, said Friday domestic liquor prices will rise between 25 and 30 cents a bottle. Scotch will cost about 20 cents a bottle more and other imported spirits might increase, depending on currency fluctuations.

A drought in the Beaujolais area of Franch reduced the grape crop last year and Beaujolais Superieur will jump from $4.55 to $6.10 a bottle. Pouilly Fuisse will go from $6.80 to $9.45.

Vic Woodland, general manager of the liquor control and licensing branch, said in Victoria today the government agency is just passing along increasing costs.

Regulations require the branch to maintain its mark-up, he said.

He blamed the increases on continuing inflationary pressure on manufacturers, higher costs for everything from labor to glass for the bottles and labels.

BANKER SHOT, ROBBER ESCAPES

CHILLIWACK (CP) — The manager of a Chilliwack Toronto-Dominion Bank branch was in fair condition in hospital Friday night after being shot in the groin and midsection during a robbery.

Police said John Steven Cavengen, 62, who was two weeks from retirement, was shot during a scuffle with a young man armed with a .22-calibre rifle.

Police said the man entered the bank, located at a shopping mall, shortly before closing time and demanded money.

Police said the man escaped with an undetermined amount of cash. Roadblocks around the city, about 60 miles east of Vancouver, failed to turn up any trace of the gunman.

Trudeau Comes Out Swinging

Times News Services

Trudeau came out swinging Thursday and Friday, trying to discredit separatist philosophy and appealing to all Canadians to become more tolerant of one another.

His parting note from a Liberal party function Friday night was to remind his followers that they faced two battles — separatism and victories in five forthcoming federal byelections in Quebec.

Earlier Friday, Trudeau's speech to several hundred businessmen was described by some observers as one of the best of his career.

The prime minister warned Quebecers that they must take a firm decision on their future becuase uncertainty is hurting the province's economy.

They must decide between independence or association; danger or opportunity, he said.

His appeal to English-Canadians was to be more tolerant of French-Canadians.

"Many English say to Quebec don't leave us, we need you.

"But, you English-Canadians, what are you doing about it? Are you going to beef when you see French on a soup can or a box of corn flakes?"

He added that business in Quebec has already suffered for years from the province's political uncertainty.

To choose demands maturity and develops maturity," said the Prime Minister, comparing Quebec to an adolescent about to choose his life's aspiration.

"But the choice must be made clearly and must be made soon."

The sentiments he expressed during a busy two days could perhaps be symbolized by an incident Friday evening when Mr. Trudeau walked through a crowded shopping centre to chat and shake hands.

A youth, who described himself as a Quebec nationalist and who had been following the prime minister for several minutes waving Quebec's blue-and-white flag, suddenly found himself in a tug-of-war with Trudeau for possession of the banner.

"It's my flag," the bearded youth said.

"It's my flag too," Mr. Trudeau replied, yanking it out of the surprised youth's hands and waving it to a cheering crowd of several hundred.

Premier Rene Levesque, meanwhile, told Quebec's largest employer association Friday that the referendum on Quebec's independence would be held in about two years, the president of the Conseil du Patronat du Quebec said.

Pierre des Marais II said Mr. Levesque told the Conseil at a meeting that the referendum would be held "as soon as possible, probably two years or little longer."

Until now, Levesque has been hesitant about specifying when the referendum would be held, saying only it would be within the government's five-year mandate.

The Conseil is anxious to have the question of independence settled one way or the other as soon as possible because the waiting period has caused uncertainty which, is bad for investment, des Marais said.

Grounded Barge Leaking Oil

BUZZARDS BAY, Mass. (UPI) — A 350-foot barge, leaking some of its 3.5 million gallons of highly toxic home heating fuel, today appeared to be slowly sinking in ice clogged waters about 100 yards off the shores of this summer resort area.

Hundreds of yards of beach shoreline have been defiled by an undetermined amount of the no. 2 oil, which is seeping up through cracks in the ice and giving the sandy beaches a yellowish tinge.

According to witnesses the oil can be smelled at least one mile away from the shores of Wings Neck. The barge has large holes in four of its 10 compartments.

Authorities said major ecological damage could occur because most of the oil is trapped beneath one foot thick ice and is unable to dissipate. "They can see oil beneath the ice," coast guard spokesman Charles Crosby said.

It is the second incident in about one year involving the same barge in almost the same exact area.

At dawn today seamen were attempting to manoeuvre two tug boats and an empty barge dispatched by the grounded vessel's owners, the Bouchard Transport Co., of Hicksville, N.Y., next to the striken one in an attempt to offload the cargo. "But the ice is preventing quick action," a coast guard spokesman said.

Two Inmates Caught In Second-Try Escape

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Two men who escaped from Wilkinson Road jail for 15 days last month failed Friday in another scramble for freedom.

Saanich police said Dennis Matthew Wilson, 23, and Thomas Russell Totten, 26, were being led under sheriff's guard into the fence-enclosed intake area at about 12:45 p.m. when they broke free.

Wilson climbed over the 10-foot fence, cutting his hands on three strands of barbed wire on top.

Totten, right behind him, never made it. A sheriff grabbed him by the leg and wrestled him to the ground.

The escape triggered an alarm and several jail employees raced to their cars and chased the fugitive.

A worker in the hospital unit spotted Wilson at the corner of Wilkinson Road and Interurban less than a quarter mile away from the jail. At the same time police arrived and took him into custody.

Wilson was returned to the jail where he and Totten were frisked and put into isolation cells.

Prison officials said Wilson had two pieces of paper on which he had written names and addresses of several persons on the Island. He was carrying a small package of white pepper which they think he intended to use to throw tracking dogs off his scent.

Spain Hunts Terrorists

Times News Services

MADRID — The Spanish government has cleared the way for a police crackdown on extremists after an outburst of political violence that has taken 10 lives in the last week.

Under mounting pressure to halt the bloodshed, the cabinet of Premier Adolfo Suarez Friday night stopped short of declaring a state of emergency but gave police sweeping powers of search and arrest.

The government move, which followed the killings here Friday of two policemen and one paramilitary civil guard and the wounding of three other policemen, was expected to herald arrests throughout Spain of extremists and their sympathizers.

Under the new powers, which involve the suspension of two articles in the Spanish bill of rights for a month, police will be able to search homes without warrants and hold suspects indefinitely.

The cabinet said that a state of emergency was not necessary because the murders were the work of minority groups only.

Meanwhile, a left-wing urban guerrilla group today said it is responsible for the submachine gun slayings of the three Madrid policemen.

BCR Inquiry Moves Closer To Old Socreds

Deputy attorney-general David Vickers said Friday he will require statements from former senior officials of the British Columbia Railway if they are necessary to his investigation of contracts let by the railway on its Dease Lake extension.

Vickers did not name any railway officials, but former premier W. A. C. Bennett was president of the Crown-owned railway when the controversial contracts were let in the early 1970s.

Other directors of the railway at the time were Ray Williston, then minister of lands and forests and now head of the B.C. Cellulose Corporation, Einar Gunderson, a former aide and confidant of the senior Bennett and Joe Broadbent, then vice-president of the railway and its chief operating executive.

Vickers was appointed about two weeks ago to head an in-house investigation into circumstances surrounding a court case involving M.E.L. Paving, a Red Deer, Alta., construction company which sued B.C. Rail for civil fraud. The case was settled out of court for $2.5 million.

M.E.L. claimed in its suit that B.C. Rail was grossly inaccurate in estimates of grading work to be done on the extension.

The New Democratic Party opposition said the government covered up a disastrous past by settling the case out of court and refusing to hold a judicial inquiry into the matter.

Vickers said a review of 5,000 pages of court transcript dealing with the M.E.L. Paving suit has not been completed and it has not been determined whether statements will be required from former railway principals to assist his investigation.

A decision on further interviews is expected in about two weeks, he said, none of the previous directors testified at the trial before the suit was settled out of court.

Snow, Winds Strangling U.S. East, Ontario

Times News Services

Blizzard conditions held the eastern and midwestern United States in a stranglehold today, plummeting temperatures to about 20 below Celsius, disrupting travel by road, air and foot, and forcing several states to call out National Guard units to dig out cities and rescue stranded motorists.

Blowing and drifting snow also created havoc in southwestern Ontario on Friday, forcing the closing of many schools, highways and businesses.

Hardest hit were the Windsor, Catham, St. Thomas, Stratford and London areas were snow blown by gusting winds closed all roads and highways.

In Chatham, all bus, taxi and private vehicle traffic was halted and public works department snowplows and sanders were ordered to clear emergency routes only. All schools and most businesses closed early.

High winds blew down a wall of a warehouse owned by Eaton-Yale Ltd., a Chatham company which manufactures auto parts. There were no injuries.

The weather office said up to 10 cm of snow had fallen in many areas of southwestern Ontario by noon Friday and predicted a continuation of very cold temperatures and severe drifting today.

Tony Fredo, a spokesman for Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd., said the company cancelled afternoon shifts at its plants in Oakville, St. Thomas and Niagara Falls because of the storm.

Provincial police reported hazardous driving conditions on all highways in the western region of the province. One police spokesman said he would order all highways closed if he had the manpower to enforce it.

A 90-mile stretch of Highway 401 between Chatham and Windsor was closed and police urged drivers elsewhere to stay off roads unless absolutely necessary.

At least seven died in stranded vehicles in or near Buffalo, N.Y., where winds gusted to 121 k.p.h. and temperatures fell to 20 below (C) at 3 a.m.

In Ohio, the bodies of five men were found in their car which had slid off an icy road near Fostoria. Searchers looking for stragglers in subzero temperatures and blowing snow discovered the victims.

"They apparently froze to death," said deputy sheriff C. R. Roberts.

The frozen bodies of two women who walked away from stalled cars were found Friday in Illinois, one in a snow bank near Sullivan in central Illinois and the other on a road outside of Joliet.

Buffalo firefighters struggled through snow-smothered streets littered with hundreds of abandoned cars and buses to battle a five-alarm fire that spread through six houses of the city's West Side Friday night.

Buffalo Fire Commissioner Karl Kubiak urged snowmobile owners to make their equipment available if needed, and police were using snowmobiles.

BLUEPEACE: SOME BIG DOUBTS

Symbolic Protest Flopped But What a Day to Cherish

Never have I mourned the passing of a single day as much as I did this day one week ago.

For on Sunday I turned 40. And it was such a traumatic change, I really haven't got used to the idea yet. Maybe I never will.

It's strange, too, as there is no visible hurdle to clamber over. But quite suddenly it seems you've gone around the bend in life or over the hill, as it were. You're not quite an oldie but you're in what many kindly call the "masters" class. And everything even remotely physical you now attack with much greater vigor and enthusiasm to prove you can still do it.

And that is strange in my case for I feel I'm in as good a shape as your average 40-year-old, though perhaps not your average Swedish 40-year-old I'm not that much overweight, can still manage the odd game of squash and tennis, have a few hairs left on my head and even had a good dental checkup a couple of days ago with no cavities. (Mr. Goodwin would be pleased!)

At least, I didn't spend my birthday hiding from the world and brooding like Elvis did when he turned "fat and 40" two years ago. No, I ventured out on the high seas and had a marvellous day relaxing in the sun and salt air and feeling very close to nature.

I had been invited by Dr. Harry Carter to go for a cruise aboard his 36-foot trawler Tedmac out into the waters of Juan de Fuca Strait.

Carter is the Victoria orthopedic surgeon who recently became so incensed while watching TV programs on the rash of oil tanker mishaps that he founded Bluepeace, a group to fight tanker traffic in Canadian waters.

I would like to say at this stage that, though I try to be positive whenever I can, I simply don't believe Bluepeace will ever achieve the success and the notoriety of the Greenpeace Foundation.

Like many other people, I'm deeply concerned about the possible destruction of our coastline and believe we should put as much pressure on our politicians as we can to make sure it doesn't happen. But can Bluepeace as a group be effective or is it just an emotion outburst?

Bluepeace has held two public meetings — one in Sooke and one in Victoria — at which the need to oppose an application now before the National Energy Board by a consortium of American-controlled oil companies to put a pipeline from Kitimat to Edmonton to transport oil to the U.S. was stressed. It has elected Virginia Gareau as Victoria president; delegated former Liberal leader David Anderson and a committee with the responsiblity of producing a pamphlet on the oil-spill problem; and has even come up with a catchy Bluepeace logo — a fish crying tears of oil.

Yet there are at least 10 environmental groups on the Mainland, including Save Our Shores based in Prince Rupert and COAST (Coalition Against Super Tankers) that have been wrestling with the problem now for about eight months. And throughout, the public has been apathetic.

It's just a little sad, but I can't see people being any different toward Bluepeace. Take the meeting in Victoria last Saturday.

Despite all the warnings that this is B.C.'s No. 1 environmental problem, there were only about 200 people scattered throughout the 600-seat Newcombe Auditorium. As one man there said:

"You are talking to the converted, otherwise we wouldn't be here." Then he glanced around the hall. "But, if this is all the converted there are in Victoria then God help the coasts of B.C.!"

Dr. Carter's voyage the next day was meant to be a symbolic protest. He phoned the Mayor of Port Angeles to see if a flotilla of boats owned by concerned environmentalists might sail out to meet us, sort of hands across the water and all that.

Fine idea, the mayor told Carter. Only problem was the Americans don't like to go out in the Strait in winter and he couldn't find any volunteers.

So as a symbolic thing it was a flop. But we (Carter and I and a crew of young environmentalists from the Provincial Museum and UVic) went anyway. It became, instead, a pleasure cruise as we chugged out around Race Rocks, stopped at Beecher Bay for lunch and then made it home just before dark.

But I really enjoyed it. I love the sea, and I didn't even know that just that short distance from downtown Victoria there were sealions frolicking all over Race Rocks. It was marvellous to match them and to hear them bark and know that was natural. No man had planned it, built a cage for them. And I realized at that moment just how much protecting our environment means.

And so perhaps our day wasn't completely wasted. We didn't protest to anyone. We weren't very symbolic. Yet perhaps we were . . .

"Why should I vacation in Paris or Rome?" Harry Carter asked as he watched the sealions basking in the sun while the gulls circled above. "To me, this is everything."

Challenge Hurled At Premier

The head of the 35,000-member B.C. Government Employees Union challenged Premier Bennett on Friday to prove his claim that civil servants are paid better than their counterparts in private business.

John Fryer said that allegation isn't true and produced figures he said proved it.

He also told the premier: "We are not about to subsidize the government by agreeing to a cheap labor policy."

And finally, he said Bennett should stay out of contract bargaining. "There is no place for politicians in the bargaining process."

Fryer's comments come in response to remarks by Premier Bennett at a $100-a-plate Social Credit fund-raising dinner Wednesday night.

Bennett told his audience he thinks public employees' wages should follow private sector rates. The former New Democratic Party government pushed public servant wages higher than the other, he said. "This year we hope to bring some sanity back."

B.C. Hydro employees in particular would have to trim their expectations, said Bennett.

The premier's comments come as union members are in the process of a mail ballot on long-delayed contract terms.

They are being offered a $25-a-month increase together with a $123 lump sum retroactive payment. That falls short of an offer which was rejected earlier but is being recommended for acceptance by the union's bargaining committee.

The BCGEU says the earlier offer was withdrawn by the cabinet after the day of protest Oct. 14 against federal wage controls. Anti-inflation regulations make it impossible to press for a better settlement now, it adds.

Fryer said he doesn't think the premier's comments will affect outcome of the mail balloting, to be completed by next Friday.

"I think our people are mature enough to keep the two issues separate. But my worst fear now is that I think the government is intent on a confrontation."

The union spokesman offered these figures to refute the premier's claim:

A draftsman in the public service gets $5.78 an hour in contrast to $6.07 in the private sector.

A laborer in government service gets $7.10, elsewhere $9.10.

"It is incumbent upon the premier to document those cases in which we are allegedly ahead of the private sector," Fryer said.

As the largest employer in the province, the government is better able than most to pay equal wages, he claimed.

Any move to hold down provincial government wages would tend to depress the economy in Victoria, affecting directly a block of 10,000 wage earners.

About three-quarters of that total are in the BCGEU and the rest in management positions, said Fryer.

On the premier's reference to B.C. Hydro employees, the union spokesman said Bennett should remember it was his father, former premier W. A. C. Bennett, who made the high wage settlements with the unions at Hydro. It had nothing to do with the NDP, he contended.

Beautiful Mary Jane

The English poet John Keats once wrote truth was beauty and beauty truth, and that was all a person ever really needed to know.

But it didn't work for Frederick William Andrew, 32, of 1043 Verdier, when he appeared before Judge William Ostler in provincial court Friday charged with possession of a marijuana plant.

The Central Saanich man admitted growing the plant but told police he grew it "to tell the truth simply because it was a beautiful plant."

"I suppose beauty IS in the eyes of the beholder," Ostler remarked.

But he fined Andrew $100.

Marguerite 'Almost Broke Even'

The British Columbia Steamship Co. Ltd., which runs the Princess Marguerite, showed a loss of $1,073,730 for the year ended Dec. 31, 1976, says a report tabled Friday by Transport Minsiter Jack Davis.

Davis said the vessel "almost broke even" last year, saying the statement was deceptive in that financing, refits and other items are not normally included in it.

The more than $1 million loss, coupled with a deficit of $213,960 from the previous year, left the over-all deficit at $1,287,690.

One of the charges against the 1976 operation is for $410,000, the estimated cost of the refit to get the Marguerite operational for this summer's run between Victoria and Seattle.

Liquor sales totalled $197,073, the newsstand $116,568 and dayrooms $79,146 for a total income from all services of $933,240.

Relief, Worry in Wake Of Legalization Move

Spokesmen for apartment building and condominium owners expressed relief Friday but firemen were worried after word that four-storey frame buildings are once again legal in B.C.

Housing Minister Hugh Curtis said amendments to the B.C. Building Code had been made to make the four-storey wood buildings conforming.

That had been their status until July of last year when an appeal board decision declared the interpretation wrong, making all such structures non-conforming.

The ruling meant that if such a building was destroyed by fire, any frame building replacing it would have to be one floor less.

Owners would lose a quarter of their revenue-producing property unless they went to more expensive concrete construction in replacements.

And a quarter of condominium owners would have been ousted if their burned-out building was replaced in frame construction.

The appeal board ruled that a basement must be at least 4½ feet underground. Up to that time local developers had been putting basements a foot or so below ground and using the so-called basement as the first floor of suites or condominiums.

There are several hundred four-storey condominium or apartment buildings in Greater Victoria containing about 20,000 suites.

Some insurance companies were recommending owners and strata councils over-insure their property to cover the cost of concrete replacement.

"We were after a little amendment in the regulations to save a lot of people a lot of worry and trouble," said Jim Pink, secretary-treasurer of the Greater Victoria Strata Corporation Association.

The association represents about 2,000 condominium owners in 60 buildings, most of which had been declared non-conforming. Les Litwin, president of the Greater Victoria Apartment Owners Association, said his members will be relieved.

Loss of a quarter of their revenue property would have affected owners dearly, he said. Most locally are small businessmen.

He said he and his safety officers are not happy because it really means that frame buildings could now have five storeys, with a basement.

Saanich fire chief Harold Gains said his department is equipped to battle fires in four-storey buildings but he wouldn't like to see anything higher.

Machinery Removed From Grain Elevator

Work is under way to remove machinery and equipment from the Ogden Point grain elevator which was closed Dec. 31.

Elevator Manager Chris Usher said Friday it will take another month or six weeks to clear out all the equipment.

He said almost all of the machinery is being sent to Alberta Wheat Pool elevators in Vancouver.

Usher said no decision has been made on whether to demolish the structure.

The elevator, which provided jobs for about 26 people, was closed because of the cost of meeting new fire and safety code standards.

'Super Schools' Opposed

A campaign is being organized by a group of parents to stop a trend in Greater Victoria towards "dehumanizing" education by closing down district schools to form "super schools."

The group was formed following a Greater Victoria School District report proposing closure of Margaret Jenkins School.

"We are not only opposed to the closing of the school, but against adoption of the U.S. system of super-schools," said Karen Whitworth, 459 Stannard.

American super-schools are a failure, she said.

"The policy of establishing these schools has resulted in more drug problems. They have dehumanized education, and created social problems."

She said closing down schools like Margaret Jenkins has an adverse effect on districts.

"People tend to move where the larger school is so that their children don't have to walk too far," she said. "This results in the neighborhood district going downhill. Instead of individual homes you have more apartments and high-rises."

She said all available space at Margaret Jenkins is being used.

"What we would like to see is the elementary school turned into a community school," she said. "We would like to see the school used on weekends by adults and senior citizens."

For the Taxpayer, a Move to Defuse the Minefield

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

For too many citizens, the whole subject of municipal taxation and property assessment is a bewindering jungle of bureaucratic intrigue; a minefield strewn with nasty dollar signs and numbers, but precious little information.

Why is the assessment up from last year? How do the assessors arrive at those figures? How do we appeal?

Then comes the tax notice from the municipal office and — to no one's surprise — taxes are up again. But why so much and who's the villain of the piece? What's a mill rate, anyway?

At least some of this confusion is likely to be removed if the provincial government acts on a number of minor, but sensible, recommendations in the report of the McMath Commission on Property Assessment and Taxation, which was tabled in the legislature this week.

All are designed to make the system more easily understood by the layman, and to ensure that the taxpayer has redress against what he considers unjust treatment.

For instance, the commission wants to see that vague and misleading term "improvements" removed from the assessment notice, and replaced by the phrase "buildings and structures."

Accompanying the assessment notice itself, the commission says, should be an information sheet or brochure containing such basic information as the meaning of a mill and how the mill rate is established; how the assessed value shown has been determined; the relationship of assessment to taxation, with examples; and the grounds on which an appeal may be based.

Similarly, the commission says that tax notices which now present "a bewildering array of cluttered information" should be standardized.

Despite wide differences in the types of levies and service charges between various municipalities, the report says, it should be possible to "design a standard form for use by all municipalities which would make it possible to display information in a manner more clear and simple."

Another recommendation says municipalities should be encouraged to institute a tax billing system which provides for "more frequent payments." The report doesn't say how frequent that should be, but presumably it invisages machinery for at least a quarterly billing system.

On this point, Victoria city comptroller Mason Sheldrick says the city's tax billing could be spread over the year, but it would be difficult and expensive. Even if it was only done quarterly, he notes, costs for forms, envelopes and postage would quadruple.

"We have toyed with the idea in the past but it never came to anything."

Besides, Sheldrick added, any cityu taxpayer who wishes can pay taxes in monthly instalments or on any other basis. "We accept any sum of money at any time of the year, provided it's not less than $10."

Many personal briefs submitted to the commission's hearings registered strong complaints about present appeals procedures, the report says.

Among other things, there were complaints that "it was difficult and in some cases seemingly impossible to obtain the information necessary to satisfy their inquiries or lodge formal complaints."

To counteract this problem, the McMath commission says before any appeal is lodged the property owner should be able to obtain from the assessor detailed information on how the assessment was arrived at, and the level at which other similar properties are assessed.

One recommendation in the report would, if accepted, provide some welcome tax revenue for the municipality of North Saanich.

The McMath Commission says the provincial government should pay a grant in lieu of taxes on all ferry landings and approaches in the provinces — now defined as highways under the Highway Act and therefore exempt.

North Saanich acting mayor Ald. George Westwood said Friday he was "delighted" to learn this was included in the recommendations, because it would give the municipality much-needed tax reveune from the Swartz Bay ferry terminal.

At present the municipality receives "only a few dollars for fire protection there," he noted.

DOME PROPOSED FOR ACROPOLIS

ATHENS (AP) — A $40-million air-conditioned glass dome was proposed Friday to cover the Greek capital's 2,500-year-old Acropolis and save ancient monuments there from further decay.

Former Athens mayor George Plytas said the dome is a better and more permanent solution than a plan recently agreed upon between the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Greek government. That plan provides for many of the relics to be removed to museums and replaced on the hill by copies.

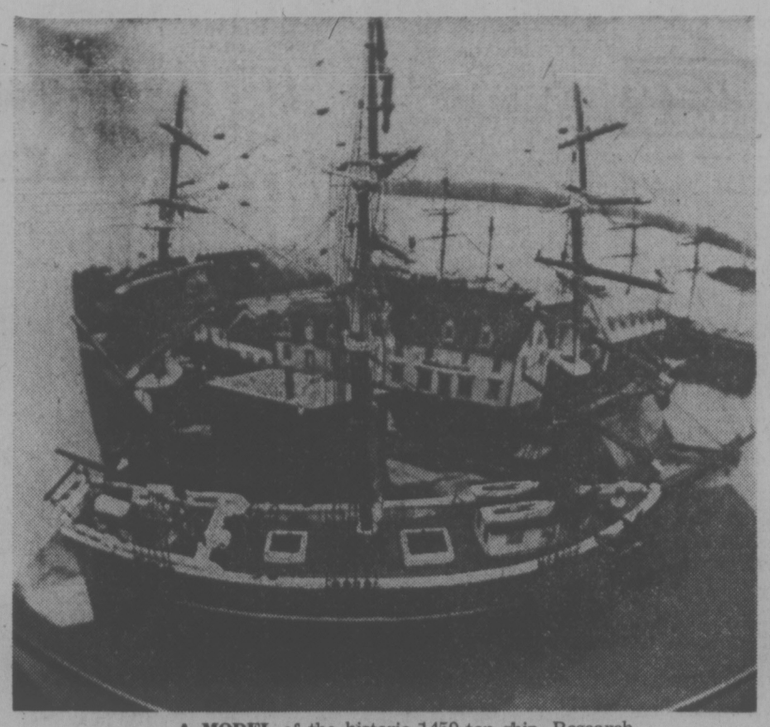
Plytas, who was mayor before the 1967 military coup and is running for the office again, said he had talked to Swiss design experts in Geneva about such a dome and had transmitted the proposal to the Athens government. He said the government of Premier Constantine Caramanlis has agreed to study it and meet the Swiss designers.

Plytas said five Swiss experts headed by architect Olivier Rossel are due in Athens Feb. 21-28 for talks with UNESCO and Greek government officials, including Caramanlis, who has taken a personal interest in rescuing the Acropolis antiquities.



A MODEL of the historic 1459-ton ship, Research, built in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, in 1861, will be on display in the Atlantic Canada museumobile opening here Feb. 18.

Two Soviet Spy Rings Broken by Norwegians

OSLO (UPI) — Norwegian authorities have broken up two separate Soviet espionage rings, arresting a female foreign ministry official and ordering out of the country six Russians, including the Tass News Agency correspondent, Premier Oddvar Nordli said today.

Officials said the cases were the two most serious espionage incidents in Norway since the end of the Second World War.

The foreign ministry identified the arrested official as Mrs. Sunvor Galting Haavik, 65, who has worked in the ministry since 1946.

From October, 1947, until February, 1956, she was attached to the Norwegian embassy in Moscow. Since then she has worked in Oslo dealing with trade political matters.

Police said she was arrested Thursday while meeting the Soviet embassy third secretary, Alexander Printsipalov, and his driver.

Three other diplomats ordered out of the country belonged to the Soviet trade mission The Tass correspondent was involved in the trade mission case, Nordli said.

'RE-LIGHT CANDLES' BANNED IN CANADA

OTTAWA (CP) — The sale, advertisement or importation of spontaneously re-lightable candles has been banned in Canada, the consumer affairs department announced Friday.

Commonly known as "magic candles" or "re-light candles," they contain magnesium, a metal often used in flares, and are considered hazardous when in the hands of children or adults unfamiliar with them.

Generally sold in novelty or joke shops, they are often used at birthday parties or on other festive occasions.

More Boys Die Early

Adolescent boys are three times more likely to die than girls, statistics released by the national health and welfare department show.

In a survey of the 10 leading causes of death in Canada in 1974 of youths in the 15 to 19 age bracket, there were 1,977 deaths involving males and 655 involving females.

Motor accidents were the single biggest killer, accounting for half of all the fatalities — 990 males and 337 females.

Suicide was next. During the year 209 males took their own lives, a number 600 per cent higher than that reported for females — 36.

The remaining eight major causes of death vary considerable between the two sexes.

For males, drowning was the third major cause — 101 deaths — followed by water accidents 63, accidental poisoning 43, homicide 31, firearms 29, explosives 24, hereditary and familial diseases of the nervous system 23 and accidental falls 19.

For females the third major cause was accidental poisoning 22, followed by leukemia and homicide, both 20, congenital anomolies of the circulatory system 12, epilepsy 11, accidents in fires 20, cancer of the brain 9, and strokes 9.

The 10 leading causes of deaths for males and females in all age groups during 1974 — the total was 166,974 — was: heart attack 51,817, stroke 16,481, lung cancer 6,602, motor accidents 6,635, diseases of arteries, arterioles and capillaries 5,801, pneumonia 5,207, other forms heart disease 4,155, cancer of large intestine 3,839, diabetes mellitus 3,164, and suicide 2,902.

Atlantic Museumobile Opens Here on Feb. 18

Most smaller Vancouver Island communities will have the opportunity to see the Atlantic Canada museumobile on tour next month from the National Museum of Canada, says tour co-ordinator Terry Malone of Ottawa.

"It is geared to visit smaller communities like Sooke and Ladysmith," he said during a city visit last week. "It will be set up in shopping centres, school yards, playgrounds and parks."

The museum-on-wheels, which tells the story of the Maritime provinces and Newfoundland, will open in Victoria Feb. 18. It consists of three self-contained trailers designed for the exhibit of artifacts, dioramas and specimens.

Malone said the museum will be set up first on the back lawn of the Legislative Buildings, later moving to other Greater Victoria sites.

He said the National Museum is producing in Vancouver another museumobile dealing with the Pacific Coast. It will tour the Atlantic provinces.

"The Atlantic museumbobile is an attractive museum," he said. "It explores the relationship between man and the sea and traces the geological, social, economic and cultural development of the four Atlantic provinces."

Guides will answer questions and admission is free.

Purchase Boost For Pipeline Set

EDMONTON (CP) — The Energy Resources Conservation Board has recommended that TransCanada Pipelines Ltd. be permitted to purchase natural gas from an additional 80 fields or pools.

The ERCB was responding to TransCanada's application that its permit be amended to provide blanket approval to take gas from any pool or field in the province. No change was sought in the volume of gas taken out of the province under the company's existing permit, which named about 150 natural gas pools and fields.

The board said it was not prepared to recommend blanket approval without further consideration but did not object to an alternative proposed by TransCanada that an additional 80 pools or fields be added.

The company said that if requested areas were not added to its permit, producers would lose some 104 billion cubic feet, valued at $100 million, in 1976-77.

Board representatives promised a report in future to deal with the pipeline company's request for blanket approval.

In its decision, the board calculated Alberta's total gas surplus at 10.5 trillion cubic feet, excluding 2.6 trillion cubic feet available for contracts, at Dec. 31, 1976.

VGH Board Wants Cheap Convention

Victoria General Hospital board members wants the B.C. Hospitals Association to conduct its conventions in a more spartan atmosphere.

The board decided Thursday night to draft a resolution for this year's convention — to be held in the Hotel Vancouver in May—proposing that cheaper and less luxurious facilities be used for future conventions.

Board member Alan Patterson said hotels are "too expensive" and other members agreed that the Totem Park Centre at the University of B.C. would be a more sensible site.

Hotel rooms in downtown Vancouver can range up to $45 to $50 a night.

Ottawa, B.C. Sign Coal Pact

B.C. and the federal government have signed a 50-50 cost sharing agreement for a $3 million evaluation of coal deposits in north-eastern B.C.

Theag reement was signed by B.C. Economic Development Minister Don Phillips and federal Minister of Regional Economic Expansion Marcel Lessard.

The two governments have been negotiating for several months in an attempt to reach an agreement which would see the development of the northeast's rich coal deposits.

Before development of the coal can go ahead an "infrastructure" of townsites, transportation and port facilities is necessary. B.C. is attempting to get Ottawa to pay a part of the estimated $500 million cost of the infrastructure.
